Worshipping Letter-Boxes.

The post office in India is regarded with wonder and awe by the more ignorant natives. In some outlying districts, in fact, the natives actually worship letter-boxes!

A story is told of a man who put his letter in the box and then shouting the address to which it was to go through the slit. He imagined that a god was sitting inside!

Another took off his shoes, bowed very low, and went through all kinds of religious rites both before and after posting his letter. Before depacting he laid some coins on the ground before the box as an offering to the god inside.

ELK RIVER RUNS WILD

Hundreds of People are Homeless In Alberta.

Floods Following Excessive Rains Have Caused Much Damage—125 Families Rescued With Difficulty Near City of Lethbridge—Calgary Had Bad Time But the Danger Is Passed.

LETHBRIDGE, June 4.—While flood waters receded in southern Alberta Saturday, a special despatch to the Herald reported that the Elk River at Fernie had gone on a rampage, and torrential rains were still falling. The river has overflowed its banks in many places, and 125 families have been cut off from the town. All have been rescued with difficulty.

The Old Man River at Lethbridge was still rising at noon Sunday, but the power house was still in operation there. At Cowley there was a five-foot drop in the Old Man, while at Macleod the water receded 18 inches.

The dam and head gates of the Lethbridge and Northern irrigation project on the Old Man River, west of Macleod, were still holding firm on Saturday afternoon, but there were nine breaks in the first four miles of the main ditch.

Crow's Nest Pass towns on the Alberta side were without light or power Sunday, owing to the washout of the Bull River Power Company's line on the McGillivray Creek in British Columbia.

The Danger Past at Calgary.

CALGARY, June 4.—It is now thought that the peak of the flood has been passed here, as both the Bow and Elbow Rivers are receding. Reports from High River, Okotoks, Macleod and the Crow's Nest Pass also state that the menace from swollen rivers and creeks is much less now. With the ending of drenching downpours to the west of here, it is reported that rivers have dropped from two to five feet.

In the low-lying sections of the city, rowboats from Bowness Park have been used by alarmed residents to transfer their household goods by boat to higher ground. Others have met the menace of rising water by moving their furniture to the upper stories of their houses.

The city power station has kept running, although the lights have flickered at times, but much inconvenience has been caused by lack of gas for cooking.

Damage is said to have reached $100,000 in the Calgary district. This includes damaged gardens, streets, furniture and payment for men hired in emergency work.

DESERONTO.

There was a large attendance from Deseronto and surrounding districts at the Camp Summerside Friday night for the annual ball of the Bowlers' Club. The hall was beautifully decorated with natural flowers. Garrett's orchestra, of Brockville, furnished the music.

Mr. Norman Armitage, of Detroit, is a visitor in town for a few days; later he will proceed to Ottawa, in attendance on the governor-in-council, regarding his war disability claim.

Thomas J. Neale, of Toronto, is renewing acquaintances in town. Some years ago Mr. Neale was a resident with his parents in town, their home being on the corner of Main and Church streets.

Mr. J. H. Morris, of Barrie, arrived in town Thursday morning in charge of a large Packard truck with an oil heater and sprayer attached.

With the assistance of Mr. Wm. Dowling, the Provincial Highway Gang will clear from the town's boundary line to Marysville. It is estimated that 25,000 gallons will be used in the operation.

Mr. and Mrs. R. C. Harris who are former residents of Deseronto, but now of the C.N.R. express, Belleville, received congratulances in town on Wednesday and were in attendance at the Bowlers' Dance, for the evening.

The funeral service over the remains of the late Mrs. Fred Mellow was held on Thursday afternoon at 2.30. The remains were conveyed from the home of her brother, Mr. W. H. Richardson, Centre street, to the Methodist Church, where during her residence here the deceased had been a faithful attendant and a zealous worker. A large number of relatives and friends were gathered in the church to pay their last respects to the dead. After the beautiful funeral service of the church, the funeral cortege proceeded to the Deseronto cemetery, where the remains were laid at rest in the family plot, there to await the Resurrection Morn. With the sorrowing husband the deceased leaves to mourn two small children. The heartfelt sympathy of the entire community flows out to those who are left to mourn, and who, in a few short years, have experienced so much sorrow.

Mrs. P. G. Johnston has removed her effects from Forester's Island and Mr. F. G. McWain, the recent purchaser of the island has entered into possession.

Mr. Wm. Graham, of Green Point, is a recent purchaser of real estate in Deseronto, having recently purchased the home of Mr. R. Thompkins, Upper Main street.

Patent Kid Strap Slippers just arrived, for Women, Misses and Children at WILSON'S SHOE STORE.

FIRE CLAIMS VICTIMS

Six Persons Perish When Farmhouse Burns.

Four Little Children, Their Mother and Uncle Cut Off From Escape by Flames—It Is Thought That Smudge Used to Drive Away Mosquitoes Caused the Fatality.

EXETER, Ont., June 4.—Mrs. Silas Stanlake, 35; her four children, Clarence, 6; Charlie, 4; Winfried, 2, and an unnamed baby, two weeks old, and her brother, Alfred, aged 45, lost their lives early Saturday morning in a fire which burned their home on the Lake Road at Sodom, three miles west of Exeter.

Silas Stanlake himself was badly burned. He saved his adopted daughter, aged 20, and his oldest boy, aged 12.

At midnight Stanlake was awakened by smoke and went downstairs to the kitchen. As he opened a door to get a fire extinguisher which he kept in the summer kitchen, a wall of pent-up flame burst in upon him. Then he rushed back to the bedrooms on the second floor to awaken his sleeping loved ones.

His wife was the first aroused. "Go downstairs and out. The house is on fire," advised the husband.

The mother started for the stairs. Then she turned back to the bedroom. "My baby," she shouted, in explanation, as the husband stared at her returning. Then he rushed to the three front bedrooms, awakening Beatrice, his brother Albert, and his son Harry, all of whom slept in separate rooms.

The family reached the head of the stairs and then, as if panic-stricken, darted back toward his bedroom and was seen no more. But the girl and the boy Harry, made their way downstairs. (There the father threw them out of a window. Then he tried to rescue the others, but was prevented by the flames. At last, weak to the point of collapse, he reached the broken window and fell to the ground.

By this time, neighbors had arrived. Although they organized a bucket brigade and lent every assistance, they were powerless to save the rest of the family. The house was engulfed in flames which prevented anyone from approaching it.

Dr. H. K. Hyndman, of Exeter, was called and took charge of the three members of the Stanlake family who had escaped the fire. The father is badly burned and bruised, but will recover. The two children, Beatrice and Harry, are also bruised from their fall.

Motorists were attracted from miles around. Soon after the fire became visible almost one hundred cars were on the scene. Exeter and their friends did all they could to quell the flames.

The fire apparently broke out in the kitchen. The Stanlake homestead is an old frame building, erected 40 years ago, and proved an easy prey to the flames.

Silas Stanlake was formerly a school teacher at Sodom. She married Silas Stanlake fifteen years ago.

The fire, it is thought, may have caught from a smudge used during the day to rid the house of mosquitoes.

MARCONI IS INDICTED.

Famous Italian Inventor Is Charged With Fraud.

ROME, June 4.—Senator William Marconi, the inventor, is by examination of the Senate Committee of Senatorial Commission, together with other members of the bank's board of directors. All are accused of fraudulent dealings in connection with the bank 18 months ago.

Marconi is charged specifically with having misappropriated to his own end about 360,000 lire—about $17,000 at the present rate of exchange. The Senate refused the Royal Prosecutor's demand for a warrant of arrest against Marquis Sonari, manager of the Italian branch of Marconi's Wireless Company.

Mr. Marconi has not visited Italy since last January, and it is reported he has sold or otherwise disposed of his real and personal estate there.

Dies While Shearing Sheep.

ORANGEVILLE, June 4.—John Albert Summerville dropped dead while having a pet of shearing sheep on his farm in the township of Adjala, Saturday afternoon. Dr. D. L. Free of Alliston was immediately summoned and he pronounced death due to a blood clot on the brain.

Mr. Summerville was a lifelong and highly respected citizen. He had spent his boyhood days in that community, and since that time he followed agricultural pursuits, being a very successful farmer. He was 52 years of age and leaves a widow and a family.

The Luton Mystery Man.

LONDON, June 4.—A mystery man, who claimed to have lost his memory, has been found to be a Canadian ex-convict. He is Jas. L. Burke, who was found near Luton, suffering from alleged aphasia. He was sent to the workhouse infirmary, and a week later was arrested for theft. He was sentenced Saturday to three months' hard labor, his records showing that he had served two and a half years in a Canadian penitentiary.

Metal Paper.

It is reported that lithographers have for sometime been using plated paper instead of thin metal sheets, preferring the former as the paper body gives a soft cushioning effect which cannot be obtained with the solid metal. For this purpose the metal is electro-plated on the surface of the paper, which has first been coated with a layer of graphite to give it a conducting surface. The principle thus employed is old, but the difficulty has always been that the liquid in the plating bath would soak into the paper and would loosen the metal film from it even while the work was being deposited. Now the the users have learned that by first coating the paper with a varnish or lacquer impervious to moisture, they can make it immune against the direct action of the liquid, so that the film of metal will cling firmly to it.

Partridge Swallows in Mongolia.

Almost everywhere in Mongolia we met with either single pairs or whole flocks of the bright-yellow partridges, or "partridge swallows," so called because they have long, sharp tails resembling those of swallows, and because their flight is a close copy of that of the swallow, says Ferdinand Ossendowsky in his absorbing book, "Beasts, Men and Gods." These birds are very tame or fearless, allowing men to come within 10 or 15 paces of them; but when they do break, they go high and fly long distances without lighting, whistling all the time quite like swallows. Their general markings are light gray and yellow, though the males have pretty chocolate spots on the backs and wings, while their legs and feet are heavily feathered.

Australian City Growing.

The first city on the southern continent to pass the 1,000,000 mark in population is Sydney, which, in an unofficial census conducted in December, showed a total of 1,050,000 persons in the greater metropolis.

A Hypnotic Bugler.

Two soldiers in a negro regiment, says the Gold Chevron, were boasting about their company buglers.

"G'long wit' yoh, boy," said one. "You ain't got no booglers. We is got the boogler, and when that boy wraps his lips around that horn and blows he pay off de sounds just like a symphony band playin'."

"Well, if you like music, that's all right; but if you is yearnin' for food, you want a booster with a hypnotic note, like we is got. Boy, when Ah hears old Custard-Mouth Jones discharge his bluat Ah looks at mah eats and Ah says: 'Strawberries behave yourselves! You is crowdin' all the whip cream out of mah dish.'"

WILL USE SIGNAL FIRES.

Plans of Explorer for Trip Across the North Pole.

Roald Amundsen, the explorer, plans to hop off from Wainwright, on the north coast of Alaska, for his flight across the north pole to Spitzbergen on June 20, or as near there after as weather permits.

Because the date cannot be fixed exactly in advance and because preparations for retiled if the flight meet with disaster in Spitzbergen depend on knowledge of the time of his flight, citizens of Nome, Alaska, and the chamber of commerce have planned a system of signal fires to carry the news of his start from Wainwright to the nearest radio station, 60 miles away.

This plan calls for the stationing of between twenty and thirty parties of two Eskimos each at intervals along the coast from Wainwright, near Point Barrow, to Noorvik on the Kobuk river, north of Bering straits.

Huge bonfires are to be built at intervals of about fifteen miles along the coast, driftwood and coal being used. When Amundsen starts his flight the bonfire at that point will be lit. Observers at the succeeding station will be on the watch for the smoke and at sight of it will light their own fire. This will set in motion the chain or signal bonfires.

If the day is clear when Amundsen starts to fly across the pole it is believed the bonfire signals will work without a hitch and relay the news along the coast for 400 miles to Noorvik within a few hours. Even if one or two breakdowns occur and the Eskimos have to make the connections by carrying the signal, it will still be possible to wireless the news from Noorvik in time to give warning at Spitzbergen to the scout planes that are to be there to render assistance if Amundsen meets with trouble on the latter part of his flight.

After the news is sent out from Noorvik by radio it can be relayed by radio, telegraph and cable to Spitzbergen.

Poisons That Do Good.

We read in our newspapers of so many cases of death by poison that it may be interesting to look at the other side of the shield, and at the enormous value of some of these substances which are deadly if misapplied.

There is arsenic. Apart from its use as a weed killer, it is simply invaluable to the sheep farmer. "Sheepdip," made from arsenic, kills all those parasites which infest the wool of sheep, yet it is quite harmless to the animal itself. It would, of course, be foolish to use it on a sheep that had a raw wound on its body, for fear of blood-poisoning.

Arsenic is also by far the best remedy for the disease called "foot rot."

Other forms of arsenical washes are used for spraying fruit-trees.

Copper salts, almost as deadly to animal life as arsenic itself, are more valuable to the farmer than any other poison. Every up-to-date wheat grower uses a solution of "bluestone" for checking smut and bunt in wheat.

Copper sulphate is used in ever increasing quantities as a spray, for the purpose of combating the potato disease. Three applications are necessary, at intervals of three weeks.

Seriously enough, the spraying also increases the potato yield, from ten to twenty per cent.

One of the worst weeds which pesters the farmer is the common charlock. Charlock often springs up in a wheat field, in such quantities that it absolutely stifles the wheat. The discovery has been made that, if the field is sprayed with a three per cent. solution of bluestone just when the charlock is coming into leaf, the weeds are killed outright, while the little corn plants remain uninjured.

One of the most valuable of all discoveries regarding the use of copper salt, is its power of destroying disease germs in water. One part of sulphate of copper to one hundred thousand of water will absolutely stamp out typhoid germs.

The value of such discovery to the health of our great cities need not be dwelt upon. But in these, as in all other cases, poisonous substances should only be handled by experienced people.

Drink.

Could you drink seventeen large glasses of wine (more than half a gallon) in six minutes? Edmund Gwenn, English actor, does it in the musical play, "Lilac Time." Result: He's the theatrical sensation of London. The English mob can't understand how anyone can guzzle over two quarts of wine in six minutes and do it twice a day. Gwenn lets them in on his secret—the "wine" is colored water. But that only puzzles the English still more. . .

Swallowing half a gallon of water in six minutes is an achievement. Gwenn says he has to drink on an empty stomach, doesn't dare eat before the show. All of which may seem unimportant. But the English public is giving it about as much attention as the situation along the Rhine. Thus returns normaley, the period in which public attention is chiefly on trivialities.

Nicotine.

Nicotine is an alkaloid. It belongs to that important class of organic substances which are particularly characterized by their extremely potent physiological properties, observes the Scientific American. They are all well known poisons and several of great utility to the physician. Such substances as morphine, cocaine, heroin, strychnine, caffeine are alkaloids. Nicotine can, accordingly, exert a powerful action on the human system; in fact, it is a deadly poison, almost as poisonous as prussic acid gas. Nicotine itself is used on rare occasions in medicine as an antidote in strychnine poisoning and in the treatment of tenanus. Nicotine contains the element nitrogen. According tobacco that is grown in a very rich soil which has been fertilized with a strong nitrogeneous manure will be high in nicotine.

A Little Bird Told Me.

The common expression, "A little bird told me so," means that information respecting a matter has come to a person in some secret and perhaps mysterious manner. The saying is not a literal quotation, but is borrowed from the twentieth verse of the tenth chapter of Ecclesiastes. The verse opens with a warning not to curse those in power, and even in thought or "in thy bed chamber" for a bird of the air shall carry the voice, and that which hath wings shall tell the matter.

LEGISLATING PEOPLE INTO HEAVEN

Dr. J. G. Shearer.

The man on the street and occasionally in Parliament sneeringly asserts, "You cannot legislate people into heaven." Recently a clergyman has raised the question whether it is wise to attempt to establish the Kingdom of God by legislation? That is a better way of putting the question, and when so put by such an individual deserves a serious answer.

And our first word in answer must be that we know of no person nor group in Canada that proposes to "establish the Kingdom of God by legislation." Our second must be that in our opinion without question "it is not possible to establish the Kingdom of God by legislation," and hence that no wise man will try that impossible thing.

But there are things that can be done by legislation that have a no-insignificant bearing on the establishment of the Kingdom of God in this world.

First, negatively, much that hinders the Kingdom of God and prevents many from entering that Kingdom can and ought by Act of Parliament to be forbidden and suppressed, for instance the illicit traffic in habit forming drugs such as opium, morphine and cocaine. That traffic is cutting down thousands of Canadians, mostly young (fifteen and twenty-five year of age) every year. It is estimated by the Federal Department of Health that there are at present not less than 9,500 persons addicted to which means enslaved by) these drugs, and hundreds of unscrupulous villians, largely Chinese, are engaged in the business of enslaving them 'for the money there is in it.' And Parliament is at present passing a new, improved, consolidated law will very heavy penalties and appropriating large sums of money for its enforcement, for the purpose of suppressing this hellish business that rapidly ruins the health, the sanity and the morals of its many victims; or in other words for the removing of a great hindrance to the establishment of the Kingdom of God. Isn't this wise? It is the same principle applied to other harmful traffice in human vice, such as the traffic in girls for immoral purposes, the traffic in obscene books and pictures, salacious plays, etc., these can only be suppressed by wise legislation, worthily enforced. Not many will question the wisdom of legislation of this kind.

Second, positively, there are many classes of its citizens that the nation cannot save from crime and ruin without legislation as for instance under privileged and handicapped children, dependent, neglected, delinquent, physically and mentally defective, and such children born out of wedlock. To illustrate from the first named class, namely dependent children. Many thousands of mothers are left widows entirely without income, and with the care of a number of little children on their hands. In the past they have only had two alternatives, the accepting of charity, or endeavoring to perform the function of both breadwinner and mother, and very few such widows are able to do either this double load without breaking in health, or in mind, or in morals. Society has found a better way in the Mothers' Allowance laws, in terms of which the Province provides month by month for the necessities of life for such mothers and their little families. At the time of writing in the Province of Ontario and the West, there are 6,500 such widowed mothers with 22,000 children in the aggregate of their families, provided for at the cost to these five Provinces of $3,000,000 per year. It is not difficult to imagine the great number of domestic tragedies thus averted, and the number of children that otherwise might be worthy citizens becoming delinquents or criminals, as so many have done, when both unmothered and unfathered, as is the case where the father is dead and the mother is compelled to go out day by day to earn her living. By similar legislation the other classes of handicapped and underprivileged children can be given a fair chance of success in life in the "Kingdom of God"—the Divinely intended new social order.

No, you cannot legislate people into Heaven, but the Kingdom of Evil can be largely overthrown, and great numbers of the victims of vice, crime, disease and injustice can be delivered by wise legislation, worthily administered, and countless others can be prevented from being victimized.

Primitive Cooking in Pygmy Land.

In the Sierra de Perija uplands of Columbia there is a race of pygmies the tallest man of which is only four feet high. But according to Mr. Bernard P. Busch, who writes in the World's Work, their size is only one of many curious things about them. For example, Mr. Busch could discover no cooking utensils in the tribal kitchens, and, since monkey seemed to be the chief article of food, he was naturally curious to learn how they cooked them. He waited, and this is what he saw: Two pygmies killed the monkey, one by its arms, the other by its legs, and, standing on opposite sides of the fire, swung the body back and forth through the flame. At first the hair of the animal burned off; then the flesh grew red and finally roasted. Perhaps at the end of an hour, when it was time to eat the meal, the hands and the brains, which are considered to bethe choicest parts, were given to the two men who had patiently swung the monkey back and forth through the fire.

Exercise Must Be Regular.

Exercise becomes of value only when it is taken regularly. Normal persons should walk several miles every day, and should make the practice a habit. There is no hope for the nervous individual whose bad habits have made him flabby and deficient of stamina. He cannot be well if his muscles lack tone. Irregularity in rising in the morning is another pernicious habit. Lying abed after the regular hour of rising makes for muscular and moral flabbiness.

HERE AND THERE

Smoking compartments are to be provided in the new wooden winged monoplanes for use on the London-Amsterdam-Berlin air route.

901,980,268 feet of lumber were produced from mills in the Ottawa Valley last season as against 788,116,764 feet in the 1921-1922 season.

Last season's grain shipments through the port of Montreal exceeded 153,000,000 bushels. Revenues reached $2,460,810 providing a surplus of $266,862.

Forest rangers of the Quebec and New Brunswick forestry departments will co-operate to the extent of covering fires on either side of the provincial border.

Two thousand maples and one thousand green ash trees, natives of Saskatchewan, were shipped to the Canadian War Memorial Park at Poperinghe, Belgium, recently.

Vancouver is to have direct consular trade relations with Spain. A vice-consulate has been established there which embraces the prairie provinces and is the only one west of Montreal.

During the year 1922 boring operations for the discovery of oil and gas in Alberta were continued to the extent of 230,000 feet, resulting in the discovery and development of a field with an output of 180,000,000 feet per day.

Despite reports of adverse conditions in the prairie provinces, Department officials estimate that after paying all expenses the farmers of that province last year had $100,000,000 in net proceeds to apply on debts.

In 1906, in Iowa, a single head of oats was selected as being a desirable variety. In thirteen years this single head had multiplied to the extent that 1,500,000 acres were sown to it and showed an increased production of 6,500,000 bushels.

One of the largest timber sales that the Canadian Pacific Railway has made in several months has just been made on Vancouver Island. A group of Seattle lumbermen have secured 200,000,000 timber land at Horne Hill. The timber on this stand exceeds 200,000,000 feet.

Part of the plans for keeping the St. Lawrence open all winter submitted by Dimitry Jonavicl, Roumanian engineer, to the Federal and Provincial governments would call for the erection of a nine mile dam at the east end of Belle Isle strait, which would prevent the cold currents from the north entering the river.

The Bungalow Camps to be opened this year by the Canadian Pacific Railway in the French River, Nipigon and Lake of the Woods districts of Ontario will consist of a community house, containing a dining room with stone fireplace, surrounded by several double and single bungalows comfortably furnished for the accommodation of from one to four persons. A number of canvas houses will also be used.

The official opening of the Banff-Windermere Highway will take place on June 30th at Kootenay Landing, B.C. Motorists from all over Alberta, British Columbia and the Western States will be present in large numbers. A lunch will be provided for several thousand people at Kootenay Crossing. Prominent representatives will be present from the Canadian and United States Governments and from provincial and state governments on both sides of the line. The official ceremony will be marked by the cutting of red white and blue ribbons stretched across the roadway.

Worry.

"The mere fact of wondering whether the sweep will come to time in the morning is not necessarily harmful," says a contributor to the Windsor Magazine.

"But when you immediately follow this with the thought that he certainly won't, and then set your brain chasing round after the many other solutions a sweep hasn't turned up; the equal irregularities of char-ladies; the conviction that callers will come before the room is put to rights; the gross and gone of housecleaning and papering that room in the spring; ditto all the other rooms; the high cost of labor; the fear of a heavy doctor's bill; the sudden recollection that more Income-tax will soon be due, and so on—before you have got half through the amount of worrying topics that most of us ponder when occasions you will have done your nerves positive injury. And by rushing your brain from one topic to another, you keep be out of the question, while a dozen nightmares, representing imaginary misfortunes looming in the distances, will settle themselves on your pillow instead.

"I know quite well that the verb 'to worry' is one of the moods of the verb 'to be ill,' and sometimes we seem unable to prevent ourselves worrying; the anticipation of disaster has settled down to live with us, though we have given it no personal welcome, or no cooking. It is possible to stop worrying—I have proved this—if only we take ourselves firmly in hand, and determine that we will not let our brain be rushed on from one catastrophe to another. Don't think of yourself or of your worries, but give a thought to your poor brain that you are using in a most reckless manner. Give it a rest; it is a good friend to you, and is worth more consideration than all the worries put together.

"How are you to rest it? By giving it some pleasant, quiet subject to think over. No life has been so devoid of happiness that there are no splashes of sunshine on the road behind, no little flowers hiding among the brambles at the edge of our pathway. And even in the past held no good things worth recalling, there is always the future—and no one knows its possibilities."

No Border Bandits.

Along with the Provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta, Manitoba will take active means to prevent border banditry this summer. A fleet of fast and especially constructed motor cars, machine guns, sawed-off shot guns, heavy calibre rifles and rear bombs will be used by the provincial police border patrol, while a motorcycle squad will be maintained. The patrol has been reorganized and secret service organization has been built up for the purpose of getting information of intended raids. Provincial Police Commissioner H. J. Larsen has issued instructions to his men to "shoot to kill," and all motor cars failing to stop when ordered to do so, will be fired on. Last year the southern portion of the province was terrorized by safe-blowing and hold-up episodes.

How to Make Delicious Strawberry Jam

Select small or medium-sized, fully ripe berries. After hulling, weigh out 2 lbs. berries. Measure 7 level cups (3 lbs.) sugar into small separate pan. Spread about one-quarter of the berries on their sides in single layer on a platter and gently press each berry to a thickness of ¼ inch with bottom of Certo bottle. (This leaves skins nearly intact, but ruptures fruit inside and makes it hollow, allowing boiling sugar to saturate tissues quickly.) Transfer pressed berries to large kettle, and cover with layer of sugar. Repeat this operation with all the berries, placing layers of pressed berries and sugar alternately in kettle, putting balance of sugar on top, then add juice of one lemon, or preferably 1 teaspoon of powdered tartaric or citric acid. This addition promotes a quicker set, thus keeping the fruit evenly distributed in the jam.

Let stand over night, or at least 5 hours, so that part of the sugar will be dissolved and mixture can be stirred and cooked without crushing fruit. Use hottest fire and stir constantly before and while boiling. Boil hard for three minutes, remove from fire and stir in ½ bottle (scant ¼ cup) Certo. From time jam is taken off fire allow to stand not over 5 minutes, by the clock, before pouring. In the meantime, skim and stir occasionally to cool slightly. Then pour quickly. If in open glasses paraffin at once. If in jars seal at once, and invert 10 minutes to sterilize the tops.

The Sales Manager's Mid-week Chat

by Long Distance

The enthusiasm generated on Saturdays seems to die down around mid-week.

Sales Manager Johnson knows his men. He is their inspiration and they are all for "the Chief."

The Saturday morning sales conference is a real "get together" meeting; and when the Chief speaks, his voice is the force that makes them want to do better. He talks as one who knows. When their enthusiasm dies down around mid-week Johnson knows the need for revival. His three minute chat with each of the boys on the road works wonders. Perhaps he got the idea from the Church's mid-week meetings.

Long Distance makes it possible, and Station-to-Station rates make it inexpensive.

Illegal Fishermen's Spy System.

The Columbia river is as much a river of mystery, of adventure and of romance, even though the romance be unrecognized by the stern eye of the law, as it ever was, according to a dispatch from Astoria, Ore.

Deputy John Larson of the state fish warden's force, state department of fisheries, vouches for the system at all events. Larson patrols the river from Astoria to Multnomah Falls, 25 miles above Portland, in the patrol boat Governor Olcott. He believes illicit fishing is going on, but admits the fishermen have a clever system of evading detection.

Flashing signal lights from river bluffs warn of the approach of suspicious craft, even as the signal fire of pioneer days advertised for the suspicious Indian the approach of the white man's birch. According to Larson, the signal may be a blazing bunch of newspapers, or a spotlight, but when he gets there the quarry has departed for safer waters.

A Graceful Surrender.

"But confound the luck, how am I going to get out of the race without acknowledging that I can't win?"

"Easily enough. Just announce that however much you may desire to serve your country in a position of honor and trust, you are first of all a husband and father, and the claims of your family are such that you cannot afford to sacrifice a lucrative law practice to engage in the turmoil of a political contest."—Birmingham Age-Herald.

SOME COLORED BOXERS

WHY MOST NEGRO FIGHTERS HAVE BEEN UNPOPULAR.

First Black Man to Enter the Ring in England Was Cheated Out of Victory That He Deserved—Peter Jackson Was a Popular Victory, But Jack Johnson Was Cordially Disliked.

The history of colored men in the ring does not make pretty reading for the most part, neither does it reflect credit on the whites regarding their treatment. For it seems that the very first black fighter on record in England was cheated out of a championship.

Thomas Molineux journeyed to England from Virginia early in the last century to make a living by his fists. He stood only 5ft. 8½ins. but he weighed over fourteen stones, and a fortnight before Christmas of 1810 he fought Tom Cribb, the champion of England.

Even in that first fight it became evident that the black has great advantages over the white physically. Being nearer to the animal, his bones are harder and thicker, and he is less vulnerable about the head and jaw. Yet he is little, if anything, behind the white in the matter of fighting skill and fighting intelligence.

During the twenty-second round—these were the bare-knuckle days—Cribb was crushed against the ropes and practically beaten. But during the half-minute's rest Cribb's seconds, by the ruse of protesting that the black had bullets in his hand, prolonged the period until Cribb had recovered, and Molineux, unaccustomed to the English winter, had caught a fit of shivering. Cribb eventually won.

In later years, when gloves were introduced, there arose Peter Jackson, known as the first black gentleman, who beat Slavin at the National Sporting Club in 1892 for what is called the championship of the world.

Jackson alone, of the many negroes who have splashed the horizon of boxing history, was a really popular figure, and when he died he was mourned as sincerely as any white fighter ever has been. He fought bravely and sympathetically, and was modest in his victory.

Many other black fighters we have known since—Jack Johnson, champion of the world until just before the war; Sam Langford, Sam McVea, who died recently; Harry Wills, who has been a challenging Dempsey in vain; and lastly Battling Siki, who knocked out Carpentier last year.

The "two Sams" alone have attained any degree of lasting popularity among the whites, and that friendship was always tinged with contempt.

The negro, usually, fights cleanly and bravely. But he is rarely modest in victory. And therein lies the trouble. Jack Johnson's swaggering vanity made him a target for hate and hatred which lasts until to-day.

As with most negroes, his conquests caused a swollen head, an obnoxious contempt for the white races, and a peering manner towards his white opponents which aroused a great racial hatred between black and white.

When he married a white wife, civilized society turned and rended him, and he was finally hounded from the ring.

The Isle of Gottland.

The saga relates that the discoverer and first settler on the Isle of Gottland was a man named Thjelvar. From the same source we learn that the island was then in such an unstable condition that it was submerged in the daytime, and rose to the surface at night, but Thjelvar exterminated with fire the trolls and evil spirits that infested it, and never since that time have the waters broken over the Pearl of the Baltic. The great number of tourists who have rediscovered Gottland in recent years are of a different disposition, and what lures them thither and fascinates them into lengthened sojourn stay are the traces of those weird powers and happenings of olden times. In later years, the early middle ages, Gottland was indeed a power to be reckoned with, and it is the combination of ancient fairy lore and an interesting historical past that makes the island so attractive and a favorite spot for tourists intent on exploring strange ground.—Boston Transcript.

Quaint Wedding Customs.

Among the strange customs at Swedish weddings is that of giving the bridegroom a shirt. The gift is made by the bride, and is worn on the day of the ceremony. Afterwards the husband puts it away, and it is not worn again until his death, when he is buried in it. The Swedes believe that if a man has been a faithful husband his betrothal shirt goes to Heaven with him, if a widower marries again he must destroy his first wedding shirt on the eve of his second marriage. The Swedish bridegroom gives his bride a prayer-book and many other gifts.

Flew to Lumber Woods.

Peace has its aviation feats as well as war, and one of the most sensational of which has just been performed by Lieut. Russell Meredith, who flew through a blinding snowstorm at a temperature that nearly froze the works of his machine, 231 miles from Selfridge Field, Mt. Clemens, to Beaver Island, a lonely lumber camp in northern Michigan, where Jesse Cole, a lumberjack, was at the point of death, with a fractured skull.

While the doctor operated, thus saving the man's life, Meredith was busy keeping his engine from freezing. He conveyed the doctor safely home after the operation, and then returned to Selfridge as if nothing had happened.

EARLY VIEW OF TORONTO.

Interesting Description of Ontario's Capital In 1855.

Toronto nearly three-quarters of a century ago was a small and unimposing city, but had its good points, and it had entered upon the process of steady growth which has scarcely, if ever, been interrupted since. An interesting picture of the city was published in the fall of 1852 in the Montreal Herald, and quoted in the Anglo-American Magazine, then issue in Toronto, which a reader has been kind enough to send to me. The writer said:

It is about twelve months since the writer was in that city, and in that short time the beauty of the principal streets has been very greatly increased. St. James' church has been completed, and added to it some pretty school buildings and some other dependencies. This church, built of white brick, for which Toronto is famous, in the decorated style of church architecture, is decidedly the most beautiful and appropriate religious structure to be seen in Canada. In the order of civil architecture the new Court House deserves notice. It promises to be a fine a structure in its own kind as the church.

But public buildings may sometimes proceed rapidly when general distress prevents improvement in domestic architecture. That is not the case in Toronto. Upon King street we noticed the builders were at work in some five or six places, besides observing several new and handsome brick houses where a year ago woodon ones stood. Our readers who are acquainted with Toronto will remember the corner of King and Bay streets, which used to be disfigured by some wooden shanties of two stories. These have been completely swept away to make room for some elegant brick houses. While the retailers have thus been improving their places of business, the wholesale warehouses have also continued to augment in number and beauty. Yonge street, from the wharf to King street, is now completed nearly throughout with dry goods and other warehouses, such as would do credit for their substantial, roomy designs to St. Paul's Churchyard or Cheapside; and we noticed similar improvements on Wellington street.

UNPOPULOR PENSIONS.

Public Opinion the Greatest Obstacle to Statesmen Who Want Money.

One of the most difficult things to get in England to-day is a political pension. An act of Parliament over fifty years old gives pensions to men who have held office for a certain period, but only if they ask for them. Politicians who have qualified are afraid now to ask. They would be held up in the House of Commons to public contempt, which is more than most men can bear. Yet distinguished men in the past have accepted pensions. Disraeli, the Earl of Iddesleigh, and Mr. Childers were all political pensioners.

Only two ex-Ministers are drawing political pensions in England at the present time, as compared with six in 1908. One is Lord George Hamilton, who gets £2,000 a year; the other is Viscount Chaplin, who gets £1,200. Lord Chaplin's pension became in 1900, eight years later than that of Lord George Hamilton, who, by the spring of 1908 had received £26,208.

It is true that Lord George qualified by an amount of work which falls to the lot of few public men. He was Under-Secretary for India, 1874-1878; vice-president of the Committee of Council of Education, 1878-1880; First Lord of the Admiralty from 1888, with a short break to 1892. He resumed a £5,000 a year office as Secretary for India from 1895 to 1903, during which period his pension was suspended.

It might be argued that the ground has been spoilt to some extent for other political pensions by certain abuses in practice. Viscount Cross, who was Home Secretary under Disraeli and Secretary for India, among other offices, and who was reported to advise Queen Victoria financially, began to draw a pension in 1887. Yet Lord Cross died worth £79,000, or £30,000 more than Lord Balfour of Burleigh left.

An applicant for a political pension is obliged to sign a declaration that his total income is inadequate to maintain his station in life. There are many cases of pensioners receiving their pensions when their circumstances improved. Sir Michael Hicks-Beach resigned one of £1,200 a year after he had received a total of £7,401; Lord Eversley, when he was Mr. Shaw-Lefevre, enjoyed a pension from 1884 to 1892; and Mr. Gerald Balfour had £1,200 a year for five years. Lord Galnford, when he was Mr. Pease, also had a pension for a short period after being Minister of Education.

The smallness of the pension partly accounts for the fact that the modern ex-Minister prefers to do without the state bounty, and looks out for a lucrative business appointment when he loses office.

Andrew Carnegie left Mr. Lloyd George and Lord Morley £2,000 a year each, and Mr. John Burns £1,000 a year. Who knows that he was not thereby saving the British taxpayer something? If so, he was also saving his beneficiaries the embarrassments of asking for something from a grateful country which the recipients know would subject them to public taunts from ungenerous and smaller men.

When Winston Won.

There are various ways of finding out how popular a man is. One is to vote. Another is to run him down, and to see how many angry voices are raised in protest.

Yet another method is to study the importance placed upon various prominent people by the newspaper agencies, who have their fingers pretty well on the pulse of the nation.

The relative importance of various politicians, for instance, was suggested in a recent statement issued by a news agency as to the number of words they proposed to supply of each person's speeches.

A "full report" was offered of Mr. Lloyd George, and 1,600 words of Mr. Bonar Law, and the Marquess Curzon. Mr. Asquith was "valued" at 1,200 words. Viscount Cowdray and Douglas Hogg were worth 800 each, and in the 600-words list were the names of Viscount Grey, Lord Salisbury, Sir John Simon, the Earl of Derby, and Lord Birkenhead.

Mr. Winston Churchill claimed first place, and the agency would send you 2,000 words of him. His speeches are ever among the most widely criticized—and most widely

How the British Taxpayer Gets the Worth of His Money

What It Costs to Run Nation

To run a country such as Great Britain is by no means a cheap business. Every year the Chancellor of the Exchequer must scrape together something like £1,000,000,000 in order to make ends meet!

This means that on the average every man, woman, and child in these islands pays rather more than $100 a year in taxation.

One thousand million pounds is a colossal sum. Actually, it represents nearly 5,000 tons of solid gold. If the Government were to call in all the taxes on one day and demand payment in gold, a fleet of 3,000 of the largest motor lorries would be required to transport it to London, and they would stretch over about fifty miles of road.

If the gold were sent by goods train, twenty huge trains, each consisting of forty trucks, would be required to carry it. If a man with a shovel started to unload them he would have to work for just one half a year, laboring eight hours a day, throwing 10lb. at every shovelful, employing his shovel every five seconds.

About two-thirds of this amazing amount of money is collected by direct taxation on incomes, properties, legacies, and profits. The remainder is derived from indirect taxes upon luxuries such as wines, spirits, and tobacco, and from articles like tea, coffee, and sugar.

And what is done with it once it has flowed into the nation's coffers? It must flow out again for services of all kinds at the rate of rather more than $150 a second! Soldiers, sailors and flying men, who are the country's defence in their keeping, demand one-fifth of it. The British pay something like £200,000,000 a year, or less than $20 each, to keep the army, navy, and air force as an insurance against war.

The civil services, which runs the administration not only of the mother country, but also of many of the British possessions, cost nearly $2,500,000,000 a year, for which sum they provide education for children; judges, magistrates, and police to preserve law and order; registrars to keep records of births, marriages, and deaths; consuls in all parts of the world to look after the interests of trade, and a host of other useful people.

The pavement upon which Britishers walk was provided by the rates, which also keep it clean and in good repair. The road upon which a vehicle, be it private car or tram or bus, runs is maintained partly by the nation and partly by the county or town whose property it is.

The sailor owes his safety at sea to the royal observations, which make calculations for his use, and to the National Physical Laboratory, which checks the accuracy of his instruments. Both of these are maintained out of taxes.

Englishmen can send a letter from one side of the world to the other for a trifling sum, or telegraph a message in a few minutes from almost any village. The post office now pays for itself, but its mighty organization could cheerfully be driven set up had it not been for the taxpayer's millions.

There are a thousand and one other ways in which money paid out in taxation comes straight back in the many comforts of all kinds that make civilized life what it is.

The British spend each year in running their country enough money to make a solid golden pile as big as a house 20 feet in height, with a frontage of 25 feet, and a depth of 20 feet. In return, they are protected not only from foreign foes, but also against crime and lawlessness. Their children receive education, the sick are nursed back to health, the fought, the needy are kept from starvation, and provision is made for old age.

Miner Poet and M.P.

It is years since the British House of Commons listened to such a brilliant maiden speech as that delivered by Mr. James Welsh. It captured the House from the start, and it was generally admitted that Mr. Welsh is one of the greatest "finds" of the present Parliament.

The Labor member for Coatbridge has already won fame as a novelist and poet, and his book, "The Underworld," caused something like a sensation two or three years ago.

Mr. Welsh was born in a little Scots mining village, and was one of a family of twelve. At the age of eleven he went to work at the pithead, and was paid at the rate of a shilling a day. A year later he went down the pit, and began his working twelve hours for one shilling and threepence.

Mr. Welsh lived in a one-room cottage with the rest of his family. He was still a boy when he started to write verses.

"My mother was my first critic," he said, "and she has been my chief critic ever since. I have always felt that, if my words pleased my mother, they might pass the outside world."

More Unity Needed.

There was a ring of true wisdom in the sentiment which Rev. Dr. H. J. Cody, rector of St. Paul's Church, Toronto, expressed at the City Club, in Boston, Mass., when he urged that if the two great English-speaking nations would come together, they could do much toward the establishment of peace in a war-torn world. Speaking of what actually happened in the Revolutionary days," he said, in part:

"Surely it is right for all of us on all sides of the question so to recount the history of the past that we shall not perpetuate hatred or suspicion or misunderstanding in the present.

"If only we two could work together, without, perhaps, any treaty or alliance, but only from good understanding between us, we would control one-third of the earth's surface, over one-third of the world's inhabitants and possess one-half of the world's wealth. Our two great peoples should march side by side to emancipate the world, striving together in the common cause.

"Maybe it is permissible to see in Longfellow's famous words a larger point of view than he intended when he wrote:

Sail on, O Union, strong and great!
Humanity with all its fears,
With all the hopes of future years,
Is hanging breathless on thy fate!

PROOF that the Ford is recognized as a farm necessity is shown by the fact that when the Committee on Agricultural Conditions investigated the prices of things entering into farm production, they investigated the price of Ford Cars to the exclusion of every other make of car.

PROUD OF LONG ANCESTRY

English Families That Can Trace Their Descent Directly for More Than Ten Centuries.

The Assheton, in direct descent, have held land at Downham, Lancashire, during the reigns of 17 sovereigns of England. The present lord of the manor of Downham, conjured with whom many dukes, earls and marquises are mere parvenus as far as pedigree is concerned, is Ralph Cockayne Assheton, who has been high sheriff of Lancashire and is a deputy lieutenant and an alderman for the county of Lancaster.

But the long record of this family is equaled by others in a humbler sphere of life.

William Purkis, the groundsman at University of College school, is a direct descendant of Purkis, the charcoal burner who picked up William Rufus' body in the New forest and took it to his cart, to Winchester. Other descendants of Purkis still inhabit the New forest district, and until two generations ago one of them owned a small plot which had come down to him in the male line from Norman days. The groundsman Purkis claims that up to recent times his family had in its keeping a genuine spoke of the wheel of the cart which took the king's body to Winchester.

"It was kept in a glass case," he told an interviewer, "until one night when my grandmother in a fit of temper threw the spoke in the fire. The burning of the spoke caused a great stir and next Sunday the parson preached a sermon on it."

Not long ago there died at Gattonside, in Roxburghshire, a farmer named Thomas Deuchers, whose ancestor settled there in the time of Robert Bruce. He went to Bannockburn as a harpist in the train of Edward II to celebrate among the victors the defeat of the English antipated; instead, he fell into the hands of Bruce, who spared his life on condition that he compose a ballad in Scotland's honor. Boston fulfilled the condition so satisfactorily that he got in return the grant of Gattonside.

An inn at Lamberhurst, in Kent, has been held by the same family for over four centuries, and a blacksmith at Mackhoosta, Shropshire, claims that his forge has been in the family at least 500 years and that one of his ancestors shod Margaret of Anjou's horse in 1453.

WHEN KINGS WASHED FEET.

Picturesque Ceremony Still Survives in Places.

With the single exception of King Alfonso, it is doubtful whether any European sovereign still performs the ancient ceremony of washing the feet of a dozen of his subjects.

In the olden days, when all the reigning sovereigns belonged to the Roman Catholic Church, they one and all celebrated the rite; wiaen had its origin, of course, in the similar service rendered by Jesus on the eve of His crucifixion.

It would seem, however, that in these modern times kings are more humble than their predecessors. Anyhow, at the outbreak of the war the custom had lapsed everywhere save at the courts of Vienna, Munich and Madrid.

There being today no king at either of the two first-named cities, it is in Madrid alone, Portugal, since the republic, but before the revolution there the custom had been abandoned for many years, in spite of the sovereign belonging to the Roman Catholic Church.

Even at Madrid there is very little actual feet-washing done, the work being performed by deputies who kneelins on a gold-embroidered cushion before each of the twelve old men, who are seated on stools with their feet bared.

Then, while one of the court dignitaries holds a golden dish beneath each pair of feet in turn, the king pours some scented rosewater over them, afterwards slightly touching them with a damask cloth which is handed to him for the purpose by one of the cardinals or bishops in attendance.

In England no feet of the poor have been washed in public by the sovereign since the Reformation. Instead, certain alms, known as Maundy Money, are distributed on the king's behalf to a selected company of old men and women.

This money consists of silver pennies, and twopenny, threepenny, and fourpenny pieces specially minted for the occasion. As many sets are distributed as the King has years. This year, for instance, the King's age being fifty-eight, they will be distributed to fifty-eight men and fifty-eight women.

The actual distribution is carried out by an official known as the Lord High Almoner, and it is worthy of note that both he and his principal assistants are ladies—a survival, symbolical of the feet-washing ceremony of other days.

In their hands they carry nosegays, once a necessary protection against infection.

Life's Span Lengthened.

Since 1909, according to the findings of the American Emergency Council's Committee on Elimination of Waste in Industry, the duration of life has lengthened by five years and the nation has benefited to millions of dollars by lessened disability sickness. There is still a standing sick list of 2,400,000 persons in the United States, but this is a mark of reduction from the 3,000,000 of 1909. The improvement is said to be due, not only to physical betterment of the race, but to "a mitigation of the struggle for existence and a spreading of the community from dense to livable conditions." Such are some of the basic industries shows that the average individual now loses only seven days annually from sickness, as compared with thirteen days in 1909.

A New Vise.

A combined bench and bench vise for use in model-making and in the shops and consisting of two main parts, is now on the market. Says Popular Mechanics Magazine: One part, with a cast-iron base, is clamped to the workbench, and contains a tapered dovetail slot, into which fit corresponding shoulders on the second part. No screws or bolts are needed, and the vise can be slipped into this slot and held there securely when used as a bench vise, or be lifted out to be used as a hand vise.

Roman Books.

The books of the Romans were originally in the form of rolls, wound round small wooden sticks, and the "roll books" were called "volumina," and from this has grown the English word volume.

Wives Want Rights.

Scandinavian women are agitating for a return in the present marriage and property laws so that husbands would be prohibited from speculating or squandering their money in any direction, unknown to their wives.

Streets Were Cleaned.

Thirty years ago this spring Lord Athelstan, of the Montreal Star (then the Herald), in his daily column, pulled off one of the most unique stunts ever perpetratedby a newspaper proprietor. Then, as now, the civic administration of Montreal was nothing to be boasted about, but of all its services that of street cleaning was the worst. For weeks, Mr. Graham, through his newspaper, had been calling upon the Road Department to clean the main streets of snow, instead of allowing it to remain until the spring sun and rains washed it away, which sometimes resulted in snowplies at the end of May. But no notice was taken of the attacks and finally Graham decided it was time for the citizens to take things into their own hands. Accordingly he announced that on a certain day the Star would provide brooms and shovels and that the business men of the city would show the City Hall how a street should be cleaned. As a result dozens of the most prominent men of the city turned out and attacked the solid snow and ice on Mc-Gill street, while others drove dump carts into which the muck was thrown. The street was cleared of snow from Place d'Armes to McGill St., in one brief afternoon. Bankers, brokers, wholesalers, soldiers and lawyers, all were in the crowd, and most of them were given the tool with which they worked to take home as a souvenir of the occasion, which accounts for the fact that in certain stately homes on Sherbrooke Street to this day you will find the pick or the shovel with which ancestor had done his duty as a citizen and taught the city corporation the value of business methods in street cleaning.

Price of a Home Spent in Vain

Mrs. Logue States Money Failed To Buy Health, But Tanlac Restored It.

"I bless the day I started on the Tanlac treatment, for it completely ended my troubles, which had kept me in misery ever since I came here from Scotland, eleven years ago," is the grateful statement of Mrs. Emily Logue, 129 N. Park St., Hamilton, Ontario.

At times indigestion, gas bloating and heart palpitation tortured me till I thought it would drive me frantic. My appetite was so poor I scarcely ate enough to keep going, and I grew so weak and worn out I had to let my housework go. My head ached till I thought it would split. I had fearful dizzy spells, and couldn't get a good night's sleep. I spent enough money on medicine to buy a home, but nothing helped me until I started on Tanlac. I now have a splendid appetite, my digestion is perfect, and I always feel strong and well, for Tanlac has built me up to robust health and I will always praise it.

Tanlac is for sale by all good druggists. Accept no substitute. Over 37 million bottles sold.

To Bid Farewell.

McGee C. N. R. platform last Monday morning presented a little more animation than usual. Mr. and Mrs. John Todd and their family, consisting of Violet, John, Joseph and Eldon, also Mr. Todd's mother, boarded the train for Napanee, Ontario, which place will be their future home. Mr. Todd was one of the early settlers in this neighborhood. Last Friday evening a goodly crowd gathered in the Grain Growers Hall to say goodbye to the migrants. The program, which was staged by McGee artists was of tip-top quality, and reflected great credit upon those who faced the footlights, also the committee of ladies who projected the entertainment. The vocal artists were Mrs. F. Hawley, Misses Grace and Christina Orr, Marie Parkes, Sheila Large and Alvia Card. RAIN QUENCHES FIRE.

Danger Is Now Passed in Northern Ontario Bush.

PORT ARTHUR, June 4.—Reports on the fire situation east and west of Port Arthur would indicate that danger from present burnings is past for the time being. The reports are the most encouraging in four days.

Saturday night Port Arthur and district were visited by a heavy thunderstorm for over an hour, which, though it did little but lay the dust and refresh the parched gardens, must have damped down all incipient bush fires and quelled the larger outbreaks.

Hornepayne, a divisional point on the Canadian National east, reports fires burning in many localities, but they are not as serious as last week. The weather is given as cloudy and cool. In some instances there are signs of fires burning themselves out. At Atikokan the danger appears over, unless increased wind gives the fires a new lease of life.

At Graham, which reported the fire to be within a hundred feet of the depot, it has swept by, and is travelling parallel with the railway line. No return is expected there.

White River reports the fire now well under control and little danger from a recurrence is looked for. No word has been received from Franz, the junction point on the Canadian Pacific and Algoma Central. A large gang of men is on their way to the scene, having left Port Arthur last night.

At Coughlin, where bridges carrying Canadian Pacific and Canadian National main lines were reported in danger, the situation is well in hand.

The district immediately surrounding Port Arthur appears worse, if anything. The nearest blaze is on what is known as the Mitchell property, a few miles north of the city, where the fire last night destroyed fifty acres of green timber.

On the whole, the situation appears improved. The absence of wind is attributed to this condition and should it hold off for another twelve hours there is every possibility of the bigger fires burning out. In any event, it will give fire fighters an opportunity to cut around in order to check the "head."

TIRED OF RUHR DEADLOCK.

Belgium Wants Allied Harmony and Definite Action.

PARIS, June 4.—The belief is growing here that at the Brussels conference this week, Belgium, tired of the unproductive deadlock in the Ruhr, will make a number of definite proposals constituting a basis for collaboration of a new reparation plan.

There is no ground for the supposition that Belgium wants to part company with France on the principle of the Ruhr occupation. But she is anxious about two points: First, to have counter-propositions ready for Germany should the Reich's expected note be found unsatisfactory; second, to organize a practical system that shall yield a fixed minimum, revenue to pay not only the heavy occupation costs, but also a substantial balance for the general reparations account.

Premier Poincare has been examining a voluminous document compiled by Belgian experts under the direction of Premier Theunis and Foreign Minister Jaspar. It is packed with figures showing how a system of monopolies on German railroads, tobacco, sugar, alcohol, etc., could be made profitable to the Reich's creditors.

Belgian experts believe, contrary to American and British opinion, that an international loan to Germany is possible, and that such a loan is still the best means of obtaining the bulk of the payments required from Berlin. Their report enumerates securities which the Reich could give to subscribers to a loan.

It is Belgium's belief that efforts be made to restore full inter-Allied unity on some such basis as the above, and notably that England be invited to adhere to the proposals which may result from the Brussels conference. However, Belgium is not prepared to sacrifice to the general entente the principle that the Ruhr must be held until Germany pays.

STOCKHOLM, June 4.—A Moscow despatch to the Tidninaen says George Tchiterin, the Soviet Foreign Minister, has telegraphed Leonid Krasin, who is representing the Russian Government in London, that Russia, in order to bring about the solution of the Russo-British dispute, is ready to reduce the personnel of its legations in Afghanistan, Persia and Khiva (Russian Turkestan) and consult the British Government in the selection of their successors.

CATTLE MARKETS

TORONTO LIVE STOCK.

TORONTO, June 4.—Shipments of cattle to Union Stock Yards from the Union Stock Yards during the past week are a record for any week so far this year. Around 2,400 more cattle and fat steers were shipped. The big proportion of the cattle that were shipped were feeders, a class which is meeting an excellent market in the Old Country. Export buying was the outstanding feature last week.

While prices for export cattle strengthened during the week, there was some weakness in butcher classes at the finish of trading. Packers seem to be supplied with nearly all the cattle they want, and trading late in the week in these classes lacked life.

The month of May was a good one for shippers of live stock to the Union Yards. The approximate total sales value of live stock during that period was over $8,375,000. This is the heaviest total for any month so far this year. It should be pointed out, however, that cattle values were higher during the month and that receipts showed an increase over the previous month. Total sales of cattle had a value of about $3,200,000. Receipts of hogs were under those of the previous month, while calves increased and lambs remained about the same.

A big drop in hog values was promptly in last week's trading. Packers have been trying for some time to reduce prices, and when the aid of a heavy offering were successful last week. Receipts were 3,000 head in excess of the previous week, and prices showed an irregular decline of 25c per cwt. on the preceding market. Their bid for hogs loaded at the week-end were $9.25 f.o.b. cars, fed and watered. Exporters paid from $8 to $8.70 per cwt. for the bulk of the best steers. Feeders had a strong market from $8 to $8.50 per cwt. with the aid of a heavy offering, were successful last week. Receipts were 3,000 head in excess of the previous week, and prices showed an irregular decline of 25c per cwt. on the preceding market. Their bid for hogs loaded at the week-end were $9.25 f.o.b. cars, fed and watered. Exporters paid from $8 to $8.70 per cwt. for the bulk of the best steers. Feeders had a strong market from $8 to $8.50 per cwt. with the aid of a heavy offering, were successful last week. Choice handyweight steers brought from $8 to $8.50 per cwt., with the medium to good ones from $7.50 to $7.90. There was a good trade in cows from $5.50 to $6.50 per cwt. Best bred heifers sold at $7.50 per cwt. Several hundred bulls were taken for export from $6 to $6 per cwt. Few good milk cows or springers were received.

Receipts of spring lambs were heavier and 25c to 50c lower. Choice weighed around $8 to 60 pounds. Sales were made at $11 to $11.25 per cwt. Choice handyweight sheep were hard to move from $5 to $7 per cwt., while heavies sold as low as $4 per cwt.

Veal prices held steady despite a liberal run. Jewish buyers were back in the market and took a good proportion of the supply. Sales of choice calves were made from $10 to $11 per cwt.

Receipts of live stock at the Union Stock Yards for to-day's market were 60 cars, 210 cattle, 4,000 calves, 700 hogs, 1,800 sheep, 400 lambs.

Hanged by Gymnastic Stunt.

MONTREAL, June 4.—Richard Frayne, 45, whose body was found by his son hanging in his home on Wednesday, came to his death through a gymastic stunt which failed him, Coroner McMahon has found. Evidence submitted to the coroner showed that an exercise which Frayne did frequently was to place a rope around his neck, lower himself from a bar with his hands, remove his hands and let his body fall, and at the same time trying to pull up his body a fraction of an inch or so by his chin. This exercise was for the purpose of strengthening the neck muscles.

Never before in Canada has a car had such a reception. The Blue Bird has stepped into immediate popularity—and rightly.

For this new Overland is not only the most satisfying Overland ever produced—but we believe it represents a value that nothing on wheels can approach.

Powered with the same motor that won such fame for the Overlands of last year, the new car is much roomier—with 106-inch wheel base and ample legroom.

The doors are full 23 inches in width, the seats are wide; the cushions deep; the appointments rich and complete in every detail; cord tires all round; barrel headlights. The ingenious Triplex Springs kill jolt, jounce and side sway.

Finished in the most beautiful and distinctive of shades, Blue Bird Blue.

CHURCHILL MAY JUMP.

British Politician Expected to Re-Join the Conservative Party.

LONDON, June 4.—The Sunday Times' political correspondent supports the rumor that Winston Churchill may become a supporter of the Conservative Government. He says:

"Mr. Asquith's cryptic remarks that the Baldwin Ministry was likely to be 'recruited and reinforced from an unexpected quarter,' is interpreted as a forecast of Winston Churchill's intentions. It has been manifest for some time that his Liberalism, which was ever of fast colour, is coming out in the wash. He remains a Free Trader, but that would not seem to be a bar against rejoining the Conservatives, pending the inclusion of McKenna with the ministry is an intimation that 'tariffs,' are to be shelved for the time being.

"The fact is that Churchill has never had any continuity in official Liberalism. He is, like his father a Tory-Democrat, and if he comes back into the Conservative party, he will be just the leader that the younger and more progressive Conservatives require. Of course I know that the House of Commons has an instinctive prejudice against 'crossing the floor,' which even Joseph Chamberlain failed to live down. But if the Conservatives are wise they will not hesitate to get ready the latest arrival."

"I hear that when Churchill wishes to resume parliamentary life a seat may be found for him in a Lancashire division."

A Gift to the Nation.

LONDON, June 4.—The late Earl of Carnarvon's wonderful private collection of antiquities which includes some of the most valuable Egyptian relics, will be presented by his widow to the nation for the British Museum, says the Daily Mail. Lady Carnarvon thereby sacrifices the prospect of greatly adding to her wealth, for the early will stipulated that if she decided to sell the collection the British Museum should be accorded the first chance to refuse it for $100,000. This sum is said to be far below the real value of the treasures.

The newspaper asserts that the prospective gift to the nation will include whatever part of the treasure found in Pharoah's Tutanhamen's tomb is allotted to Carnarvon's estate by the Egyptian authorities.

Radio Concerns Die.

Less than one-half the concerns that embarked as manufacturers in the radio industries are now alive and it is believed that 25 per cent. of the survivors are in financial straits at the present time. This state of affairs is due to overproduction and putting poor material upon the market.

There Was a Dry Murmur From the Bed.

The MAN NOBODY KNEW

By

CHAPTER XIV.

Copyright by Dodd, Mead & Company, Inc.

As the three stood watching painfully, Cullen put out his hand to Hilliard, and spoke under his breath.

"Henry—when did he come?"

"Only just now. An hour ago."

"Hadn't he told you? Or hadn't you heard?"

"Heard what?"

Cullen motioned to Waring.

"Give it to him, Rufus . . . Oh, I see; I see—"

The law student, without a word, produced a yellow blank and thrust it at Hilliard. He flushed a glance of indescribable contempt at the supine broker; his eyes had lost some of their anxiety.

"Oh, the big crook!" he said boyishly. "The big crook!"

"Sh-h-h! Rufus!" Still, Hilliard, at heart, agreed with him to the letter.

The boy stood close to the masquerader. *

"I'm sorry, Hilliard . . . It came at four this afternoon . . . we'd been hunting for you ever since . . ."

Hilliard wasn't interested.

"I'll wait until—"

Cullen signed to him peremptorily. "Read it. I tell you! . . . It'll give you a stunt on him!"

Hilliard peered over the foot of the bed; Harmon was still lying inert. The physician nodded sidewise.

"Nothing for you to do," he said grimly; and Hilliard, only partly aware of what he was doing, gave heed to the yellow blank.

The fourth telegram of the day was from Butte, Mont., addressed to Waring.

"Arrived here last night after delay in Chicago. This morning's papers contain information as follows: 'The faulted vein on XLNC property adjoining Silverbow claim number one has been found to extend a thousand feet from Silverbow boundary. Indications are ore body running at least eighty per cent average and some places high as twenty. Also some zinc and silver and traces of manganese. This undoubtedly extends well into Silverbow, where the greatest values are undoubtedly lying, and judging from records of old XLNC vein it's a tremendously big strike.' Understand XLNC owners offering large sum, said to be well over half-million, for a controlling interest. I strongly advise all of you to get aboard for as much as Hilliard will let go. Am sending this from office of Cooley, Benjamin & Russell, who will not send separate report unless you want it. This is wonderful news and mine is sure winner, even if only a fraction as large as reported. Please show this message to Hilliard. Sig. J. J. ARMSTRONG."

Hilliard sat down in the nearest chair. The lump in his throat was choking him; the moment was so big that his feelings were primitive; his expression of them were very simple. He only smiled; the meaningless, vacuous smile of an infant. That smile embraced the entire universe; it was indicative of a happiness so limitless, so perfect, that it was almost foolish. So Harmon, knowing from his long nursing of the sudden strike, had rushed to Syracuse to pose as a man of honor! So Harmon had wanted to meet Waring—and that if Waring had yet heard the news, and, if he hadn't, stop the investigation by apparent frankness and ready restitution. So Harmon had been eager to destroy the contract, to promise Hilliard anything and everything, to repay the money that was subscribed already—and then, as sole owner, to take an enormous profit for himself.

No one in the whole world—and least of all, Waring and Cullen—could have remotely fathomed the thoughts that were eddying in Hilliard's brain. They were not for his own aggrandizement; they were for the Cullens and Durants and for the others who need never know the sad of disillusionment. They were for the ideals he had struggled toward; they were for the friends who had stood by him. And there was one very especial and very manly thought for Jack Armstrong, who had been so courageous in his defeat, and so neutral in his behavior afterward, and who now had sent the generous news winging eastward, with the request that Hilliard should learn at once of his vindication.

And as Hilliard sat there, smiling out into the silent room, and struggling to visualize the extent of fortune which had so abruptly smitten him, there was a dry murmur from the bed where Harmon lay, and a resulting silence so pregnant with meaning that the smile faded, and Hilliard was on his feet, open-eyed with the present horror brought back to him.

The physician was rising slowly from cramped knees.

"It's all over," he said; paused, and added: "Apoplexy."

The only man in all America who could have testified to Hilliard's situation had ceased to breathe.

CHAPTER XV.

As Dr. Durant, having already given counsel this morning to seven patients, appeared at the door of the ante-room to signal to the eighth, he was palpably astonished at the presence of the young man who sat next to the door. The Doctor was very human; the Doctor was very adaptable; but for thirty years he had managed to keep the social and professional phases of his life entirely apart, and at the very first glance he was aware that Hilliard hadn't come to consult with him professionally. Nevertheless, he raised his finger in the usual sign; Hilliard followed him to the inner room.

It was Hilliard's introduction to the Doctor's morning manner; and even in his own exalted spirit, he yielded slightly to the restraint in the atmosphere. The Doctor was bland, smiling, approachable, and yet not at all the same man as he appeared at the house on James street. He seemed detached from the hampering littleness of a household; there was no air of intentional repose about him. Hilliard, in spite of the importance of his mission, felt apologetic; he felt as though he were unwittingly robbing science of its most valuable asset, which is time.

"I know this isn't exactly the proper thing to do," he said, "but I'm leaving town in an hour or so . . . I thought you might spare me five minutes, Doctor, even if it is a little irregular. Can you?"

"What seems to be the trouble?" The Doctor's tone was a mild invitation to squander nothing on preliminaries.

"Mr. Cullen and I are running down to New York today . . . You've seen the morning papers, haven't you?"

"Yes." The Doctor nodded. "And Cullen telephoned me last night. What Mr. . . . what was his name: Harmon? . . . was he a close friend of yours, Hilliard?"

"No; just a business associate . . . I didn't know him very well personally. Personally, I should say. But it changes some of my plans . . . Mr. Cullen and I have to go to New York for a few days and after that we're going out to Montana together."

The Doctor tapped his desk thoughtfully.

"On account of this?"

"Partly, and partly not. The whole perspective's changed; we've got to get to work. Now, the last time I saw you . . . why, that was only yesterday!" He broke off, laughing at himself. "It seems so much longer than that! Why, you said then that if I ever needed any one of several different things, including seventy-five hundred dollars, to come to you. And you spoke as though you really meant it, Doctor . . . So I've come!"

The Doctor regarded him steadily for a moment, and resumed tapping the glass pad on his desk with a meditative forefinger.

"You've reconsidered, have you?"

"Not that so much—but we've had fresh information. Jack Armstrong's out there, indirectly representing Mr. Cullen, and we've heard from our own lawyer-boy besides. So on the whole, I'm willing to let you in if you're willing to come, in spite of what I said at lunch yesterday.

The Doctor hesitated.

"Not that I doubt you at all," he said, "but when Cullen telephoned me last night, he said that you and he had raised all the money you needed in half an hour after you went out to look for it. You see, I have some channels of information myself; So I can't help wondering why you need this now." Nevertheless, he was hunting for his check-book.

"We don't need it—I simply insisted on keeping a place open for you, on the chance that you hadn't changed your mind."

"You're fully satisfied it's the right thing for me to do?"

"Yes, Doctor, I am."

The Doctor held his pen poised in the air. "I'm not sure I'm really entitled to it. Doesn't it really belong to some one who was on the spot last night?"

Hilliard's eyes twinkled.

"You're fond of talking about motives, Doctor . . . You'd have let me have that money yesterday, wouldn't you?"

"Didn't I offer it to you?"

"Yes, sir; you did. But was it because you thought you'd make a big profit, or was it just to help me?"

"Why—"

"You see," said Hilliard cheerily, "if you're going to have these mercenary motives, you've got to be on hand to save some, like I've been, to interfere with business twice in two days. And you're not the only one I held a place open for—Rufus and Jack are in it, too. It was my privilege to count that condition—and I did."

The Doctor scribbled rapidly.

"Then I'll keep my promise . . . But would you mind telling me what it is I'm buying?"

"Here's your receipt, Doctor." Hilliard laid a slip of paper on the desk; took up the check, and scrutinized it carefully. "What you've bought," he said, "is a twentieth interest in a new syndicate formed last night. We'll assume the stock control in New York, when we get there, by paying some more cash (and we've got more than we need already) and after that, we may possibly sell out, or we may go ahead and develop the mine ourselves. I don't know yet which; that's what Mr. Cullen and I are going West to decide. But you'll be protected anyhow; I'll see to that. And if you're in any hurry to get your money back—"

"How soon do you think it'll be?"

Hilliard laughed outright; a laugh of utter happiness. "Right now, if you say so."

The Doctor puzzled.

"You don't make it clear," he said.

"Then I will. Mr. Embree, down at the Trust and Deposit company, was one of the men who wanted to get in with us, and counted. He was just too late. But when I told him what I was saving out for you, he authorized me to make you an offer. I'm acting as his agent, that is, and I've got a check here, and I want you to endorse that receipt over to him, you can have this." He presented the banker's check; the Doctor stared; it was payable to himself, signed by Embree, and written for fifteen thousand dollars.

"Why, Hilliard!" he said, blankly. "Is that good business? For Embree? What's behind this?"

Hilliard fairly beamed his delight. "Well, if you want my advice, don't take it! I'll tell him that you've signed it to you, and he agreed." He sat straighter, pridefully. "Jack Armstrong sent another wire this morning—and the XLNC crowd, who own the property next to ours, know that I've had this option on part of the Silverbow stock, and they've made us a flat proposition of"—he caught his breath —"four—hundred—thousand dollars for the contract! And your twentieth share would be exactly twenty thousand dollars if we took it! But we're not going to—because it's worth still more, and we know it. Lots more—twice as much—so—"

The Doctor's expression altered slightly; his chin sank a little, and he sighed, almost in regret.

"That hardly seems fair," he said slowly. "That hardly seems fair." He smiled fitfully, and sighed again. "For years and years," he said, "ever since I first began to practice, I've been working toward a point where I hoped to reach the point where I could give up office work and do some research. . . . And here, in a few minutes, you dangle a two years' income in my hand—no service of mine at all . . . for no labor on my part . . . not, as I'd hoped, the result of service, but—"

"I own a quarter of the mine myself," said Hilliard, with equal gravity. "And I'm not thinking how I got it, Doctor; I'm thinking how much good I can do with it . . . can't you look at it that way, too?"

The Doctor nodded presently.

"I suppose that has to be the answer. Well—"

"I'll tell Embree you didn't accept." Hilliard reached for his hat. "And I mustn't bother you any more this morning; we've both too much to do. I only wanted to see you a moment and tell you the news and get your check. But when Cullen and I come back—" His smile was glorious.

They were shaking hands at the door of the ante-room.

"That'll be before the holidays, won't it? We expect you to take Christmas dinner with us, of course.

Mrs. Durant and Carol would never forgive you if you didn't—and neither would I."

Hilliard flushed with pleasure.

"Nothing would please me better and you won't tell Mrs. Durant and Carol how grateful I am . . . and how sorry I am I can't even stop now to say good-by, won't you?" As a matter of fact, he wasn't going to stop because he knew that if he did he might never get to Montana. And there was need of quick action against Harmon's cut-throat partners in New York.

"Surely I will. And I'll also tell them what an altruist you are. I still don't feel exactly right about it—but the world's the world. . . . And I'm not going to refuse an investment just be-

British Race Increasing.

The population of the United Kingdom, a little less than 10,000,000 when the century opened, had doubled by the time the American Civil war broke out. In 1901 it was 41,458,721; in 1911 it was 45,221,615. The after-war census for Great Britain showed a population of 42,767,530, excluding Ireland, so that the total for the British isles must now be well over 46,000,000. This steady growth has gone on side by side with a huge emigration. From 1853 to 1920 14,000,000 Britishers left home for places outside of Europe, for the most part British North America, the United States, Australia, British South Africa and India.

Something Off Her Salary.

"I didn't really mean that you are a beast," said the prima donna when the row was over. "You make allowances for my artistic temperament."

"I do," said her manager, bitterly, "but if there were any justice in this world I'd make deductions for it."

A DEMOCRATIC MODEL.

Minister of Crown Acts As Amateur Bartender.

Jacques Bureau, who as Minister of Customs and Inland Revenue has become the chief "taxer" in Canada, is an original sort of a cuss, who does not hesitate to make himself useful, even if it so doing he sacrifices some of his personal dignity. This was proven a few years ago at Quebec. A party of distinguished British journalists had arrived on one of the C.P.R. Empresses and was being shown the sights of the ancient capital by the Board of Trade and the Harbor Commissioners. The boat had hardly got well away from the shadow of Cape Diamond than a number of barrels and planks were converted into tables and soon covered with sandwiches and, what was more important, liquid delicacies of all sorts. But the bartenders were not speedy enough to suit the ideas of Jacques, who promptly doffed his coat and, in his shirt sleeves, started serving out the lager and other stuff.

Among the visitors was a very distinguished London journalist, the glass of fashion and the mould of form, and as particular about social etiquette as he was of his personal appearance. His promenade of the deck in company with a Canadian newspaper man brought him to the stern where the devotees of Bacchus were attending to their devotions and his eye caught the figure of Mr. Bureau.

Turning to his companion the Englishman said:

"Surely I have seen that chap before somewhere. Do you know who he is?"

"Yes," came the reply. "He is Hon. Jacques Bureau, Solicitor-General of Canada and one of Sir Wilfrid's greatest friends. You were introduced to him at the Chateau."

"What? He the Solicitor-General? You must be joking me, my dear fellow!" When assured that the amateur bartender was really the Honorable Jacques, the Man from Fleet Street ejaculated:

"What a remarkable country Canada must be! At home the Solicitor-General is a high dignitary of the Crown, but here he is engaged on a footing with the crowd. What a lesson in democracy. I must make a note of it."

And he did forthwith. Weeks later, the incident was printed in London as a proof of how democratic government in the "Colonies" shattered all the idols of the British constitution!

Leads Quebec Opposition.

An ardent horse-breeder and exhibitor, a successful farmer, his country estate newspaperman, Arthur Sauve the leader of the Opposition in the Quebec Legislature, whose party's strength was considerably increased at the recent election, has had an active and useful career in his native province. Born at St. Hermas, Two Mountains, Jan. 17, 1874, the early life of Sauve received his education at Ste. Therese Academy and at Laval University, Montreal. Almost immediately upon graduation he sought the precarious life of a newspaper life and joined the well-known Montreal daily newspaper, La Patrie.

Richard worded and equipped with unusual gifts of expression, he rapidly climbed the ladder of promotion and soon became city editor of that paper, a position he held for many years. About 15 years ago he left La Patrie to enter provincial politics, and in 1916, on the retirement of Sir Lomer Gouin he was chosen leader of the Conservative party in his province.

He was first elected to the Legislature in 1908 for Two Mountains by a majority of 174; in 1912 re-elected by 276; in 1916 by acclamation; in 1919 by 832, and in the election just held by a majority of 855. He established the weekly paper, La Minerva, in Montreal, is director of many agricultural societies, maintains a splendid farm at his constituency, and his hobby is carriage horses, which have won him first prizes in almost every exhibition in which they have been entered.

Mr. Sauve was officially honored by the Conservative Clubs in Montreal, was president of the Journalistic Club in Montreal, and author of a pamphlet on "St. John Baptist Celebration." He also served as editor of Le Canadien and of La Nation. In 1899 he married Miss Marie Lachaine of Beauli.

Scottish Thrift.

A Canadian lady now visiting London friends tells a story of Sir James Barrie, the well-known author, upon the thrifty way he used jokes and witticisms over and over again in his numerous plays.

Far from being offended, Sir James remarked with a laugh that his nationality was to blame.

"I am a Scot, you see," said he, "and we Scots abhor waste. Did you never hear the story of the aged Saunders Carlyle, who always drank off his whisky to the last drop the very instant it was poured out for him?"

"Why do you push down your liquor in that quick, greedy way?" a stranger said to Saunders in a reproachful tone.

"Well, ye see, sir, I had one knocked down in '98," the old man explained."

A Weekly Budget.

The cost of the weekly family budget in some sixty Canadian cities at the beginning of February was only practically no change over the previous month. According to the Statistics Branch of the Department of Labor, twenty-nine staple foods for a family of five cost $10.53. For February of 1922 the same foods cost $10.61. The highest point reached was $16.92, in June, 1920, while the price in February, 1914, was $7.75.

Coast Defence.

Two new instruments, expected to mark a new era in coast defence gunnery, have been constructed and will soon be installed to direct the fire of the big guns at the defences of the Panama Canal. They are called the target computer and the battery computer, and are directed by high-powered telescopes located at fixed observation stations, which in turn may receive airplane observations in case the distant enemy is hidden from land view by smoke screens or other causes. The observations are transmitted electrically to the instruments which make all the computations involved in taking into account the distance, speed and direction of travel of the target, as well as the direction and velocity of the wind, and the characteristics of the shell and powder. — Popular Mechanics Magazine.

His Excuse.

Service on a jury is a task that is shunned more generally than any other public service. Practically every excuse imaginable is presented by talesmen as a valid reason for relief of this onerous labor. But to stay awake until almost midnight before reaching a verdict and then to leave for home, only to find that during the jury deliberation your car had acquired a "paster" for some violation of the city parking laws, would be too much for the strongest man's endurance. This predicament faced a juror in one of the Marion county courts the other night when he started for home after hours of jury sessions.

The jury reached a verdict late at night and the verdict was sealed. It was to be opened by the judge at nine o'clock the next day. Nine o'clock came but only 11 jurors were present and the reading of the verdict was delayed. It was later than 9:30 when the twelfth man came into the court-room and related his story. He had spent the early part of the day explaining things at the City Court building, he informed the judge.—Indianapolis News.

JUDGE WENT FISHING.

He Left the Jury to Worry Over Their Verdict.

Hon. William Alexander Weir, judge of the Court of King's Bench of the Montreal district, who won the thanks of the women's organizations of that city by granting patents to two young lady stenographers in the new Mount Royal Hotel to enable them to act as commissioners and take oaths (after a similar request had been refused by Judge Campbell Lane), was always a good friend of the ladies. Years ago, while he was still a practicing lawyer, he was a frequent speaker before the Montreal Women's Club and in later years, when he was in the Legislature, and especially during his term as Provincial Treasurer, he spoke to them freely upon the development of the Province of Quebec, of which he was just as proud as if he had been a French-Canadian.

When he was first appointed judge he was given the circuit which included Hull and the Gatineau Valley country. On one occasion he came into Ottawa one week-end. Right in May, on his way to Portage du Fort to hold court the next day, and told his friends that he was going to have some fishing before he came back to the capital. When he got to the court he found that the calendar was a light one, only one case being at all likely to be contentious. The dispute in question was a trivial one, some neighbors' quarrel. Judge Weir tried to have the case settled without proceeding to trial, but the litigants were recalcitrant. They had invoked the law and were going to have the law, no matter what the judge would do. So the case went to a jury and the judge's fishing was off for that day. After court rose at five o'clock he tried his luck, without success.

Next morning the trial dragged its tedious way until noon, when all was ready for the jury to retire to consider the case. During lunch the judge arranged with the advocates that they would cut their addresses short, which they did. The case was given to the jury soon after two o'clock. After the jury had been "in" for about fifteen minutes the judge sent word to the jury-room that they were likely to soon arrive at a verdict.

The reply came back that they had not and were not likely to be so for several hours. Thereupon his lordship adjourned the court, changed into fishing togs and made his way out into the middle of the river. He was out until the setting sun told him that it was nearing supper time and he reached the wharf with a big string of fish just in time to be told that the jury were ready with their verdict.

He ran to the hotel, threw his judicial robes over his old suit, went over to the court house and resumed his seat on the bench, only to be told by the foreman of the jury that they were unable to arrive at a verdict at all.

The Wickedest of Puns.

Mr. D. D. Mackenzie, the dour Montreal financier who for a time had visions of becoming Premier of Canada, has had other disappointments in his life, and not all of these have been political. Long ago he underwent the fate common to so many other men; he began losing his hair.

Time made a thorough job of it. A facetious friend once told him he should get a bonus from the barber, instead of paying him a fee for trimming what little hirsute adornment is left on his shiny fringe.

Barbers, however, are not in the habit of doing such things. On the contrary, one Ottawa knight of the razor went so far as to try to make it a business asset of Mr. MacKenzie's bald pate on one occasion.

"Try a little hair tonic, sir?" he urged.

Mr. MacKenzie grunted a negative. The suggestion, coming so many years, upset splendid possibilities putting faith in this hair tonic, every one of them would positively insist on having his head rubbed. Shall I go ahead, sir?"

"No," said Mr. MacKenzie, grimly, "I won't be a party to any such hair-raising stunt!"

GOOD HUNTING FOR SHARKS

Unfortunate School of Porpoises Helpless in the Power of Their Inveterate Enemies.

Passengers on the Scandinavian liner, Frederick VIII., which arrived at New York a few days ago, told a remarkable tale of a grim battle between occupants of the deep, while off the Grand Banks of Newfoundland.

The ship was proceeding swiftly in good weather about dawn when the lookout sighted a large school of porpoises ahead.

Instead of proceeding as usual in one direction in orderly fashion, describing an occasional graceful curve in the air, the fish plunged madly in all directions, leaping straight in the air and lashing the water to foam. As they became aware of the presence of the ship they quickly gathered closely about it, as though for protection, swimming rapidly alongside to keep pace with it.

Their number was estimated at 200, the largest school any of the crew had ever seen.

Suddenly a number of huge black shadows were noted stealing up on the school from behind. The sinister dorsal fin occasionally appearing above the water proclaimed them to be sharks. They gained steadily and finally plunged among the porpoises. Instantly the terror of the latter again became apparent as they strove madly to escape in all directions.

In their confusion they dived wildly against the side of the ship. Some were struck by the on-rushing bow. Others were drawn into propellers.

Meanwhile the sharks continued a methodical campaign of extermination. One after another of the frantic porpoises was ripped by the teeth of the pursuing monsters, and left to be consumed later at leisure.

The fight continued until half the school had been killed, when the sharks abandoned the chase.

For an hour after, the porpoises clung to the ship. At last, deciding the danger had passed, they swung off on a course at right angles and disappeared.

Slate dust from waste slate mixed with a binder is being used in England for making ordinary dwelling houses in from ten to fourteen days at a cost about half that of brick.

HANDLING LAYING HENS

Feeding and Housing Must Both Be Considered.

Give the Birds a Good Run—Dry Mash Hoppers Save Waste—Suggested Ration—Forage Crops—Don'ts for the Layers.

(Contributed by Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto.)

Following are results of experiments carried on by the writer when connected with the Agricultural Experiment Station for Vancouver Island, Sidney, B.C.

Houses and Yards.

The house in which the birds are kept is provided with a water-proof roof and a floor that is always dry. In preparing the house for the new flock of pullets, everything movable is taken out, cleaned, and then saturated with a mixture of equal parts of creosote and coal oil. The interior of the house is well scraped and swept clean of any foreign material. A coating of lime-wash is then applied, and the movable equipment replaced after the lime-washing has been completed. When everything is dry, a 6-inch layer of dry straw is placed on the floor. The house is now ready for the five-month-old pullets, and care is taken to see that only strong, vigorous birds are permitted to occupy house space.

The runs provide ten square yards of surface for one bird. They are in duplicate and are used alternately for feed growing and exercise space. Late-leafing, deciduous trees only are used about poultry yards. Coniferous windbreaks are located far enough away from the poultry yards and buildings to permit of maximum sunlight entering all space occupied by the birds.

Feeding.

A dry mash hopper of such construction as will prevent waste is supplied with the following mash mixture:—

Wheat bran.....	400	pounds.
Ground oats.....	200	"
Beef scraps.....	200	"
Wheat shorts.....	200	"
Corn meal.....	100	"
Fine salt.....	4	"

This mixture is always available for the birds. The whole grain ration is composed of two parts wheat, one part cracked corn, and one part oats, by weight. This is fed on the floor of the house morning and evening, in the daily proportion of five pounds per fifty birds, during the late autumn and winter. When a supply of skimmilk is available, the birds are given all they will drink, and the beef scrap is reduced one-half. Shell, grit, and charcoal are always before the birds, being supplied in small metal hoppers which are conveniently placed.

Forage Crops for Poultry.

Small areas of kale, chard, and alfalfa were grown to be used as green feed for poultry. The chard was relished to a greater extent than the other green feeds. Green alfalfa was most sulful during its season from May to November. For winter green feed, kale and mangles were used. For little chicks, chickweed was supplied during the first ten days, then lettuce and chard. A supply of clean water is always available for all the poultry; it is given in fountains placed thirty inches above the floor and surrounded by the narrowest possible platform on which the birds may stand to drink. This method has proved very satisfactory, as it prevents the birds from working dirt and foreign matter into the receptacles.

The laying houses are kept thoroughly clean. Dropping boards are scraped and sanded every morning. All litter and dust is removed every three weeks, the house swept out, and fresh litter again placed on the floor. The perches are sprayed with a creosote and coal oil mixture in equal parts, every three weeks. During the winter period a dust box four feet square and fourteen inches deep is provided. The birds are always given the freedom of an outside run, no matter what the weather is. The drawback of this feature is used, the birds readily becoming used to its action. Heavy hens are confined in slat-bottom crates for the necessary period specified for the change of their opinion on the subject.

Don'ts For the Layers.

Don't put pullets into an unclean house.

Don't waste time on unthrifty, decrepit, or ailing birds; get an axe and a block of wood.

Don't neglect to clean the dropping boards daily.

Don't forget to clean the house and provide new, clean litter every three weeks.

Don't neglect to keep the dry mash hopper filled with a mash made from clean, wholesome grain, and meat products.

Don't waste your time with wet mashes; feed everything dry.

Don't neglect the drink; supply abundant water and milk.

Don't neglect the supply of shell, grit, and charcoal.

Don't waste time and money feeding tonics; well-cared-for poultry do not need nor are they benefited by, such a practice.—L. Stevenson, Sec. Dept. of Agriculture.

The worthlessness of poor quality quills lives alive them—in their low-producing daughters.

Apples are not very subject to blight and if we are careful the apple orchard can be kept clean.

Agriculture, for an honorable and high minded man," says Xenophon, "is the best of all occupations and arts by which men procure the means of living."

In the morning, sow thy seed, and in the evening withhold not thy hand; for thou knowest not whether shall prosper either this or that, or whether they both shall be alike good.—Ecclesiastes XI, 6.

Life-Saving Watercycle.

A watercycle has been invented by a Wisconsin man which can be used for life-saving purposes or as a pleasure craft for bathers. The frame is made of aluminum tubing and is of knockdown construction, held together by thumbscrews. Buoyancy is supplied by two air-inflated tubes, in balloon-cloth cases, which slip over the side tubes of the frame. The watercycle is forced through the water by a gear-driven propeller which is operated by bicycle pedals, the machine being steered by a rudder and handlebar.—Popular Mechanics Magazine.

LOST BY GREAT MISSIONARY?

"Lorraine" Crosses Recently Found in Michigan Believed to Have Belonged to Father Marquette.

Not long ago, writes a contributor to the Youth's Companion, some schoolboys of Delta county, Michigan, who were gathering acorns at recess from a large tree on a hill near the Escanaba river, found some valuable relics that date from the time of Father Marquette.

The boys had climbed the tree and shaken the acorns off. While they were picking them up a large one rolled under a sod. One of the boys pulled up the sod and disclosed four crosses, tarnished with age. Each was standing upright, and the tops, which have rings in them, were close together as if they had once hung from a string. The peculiar shape of the crosses roused the boys' curiosity, and they took them to their teacher, who scoured them and found that they were of solid silver.

They are of different sizes. The largest is six inches long and four inches wide; the smallest is four inches by two inches. All four crosses are elaborately engraved; except for the initials "I. H. C." the engraving on each is different from any on the rest. The workmanship shows the crosses to be handmade. But, unlike the ordinary cross, they have two horizontal bars. The upper bar is much shorter than the other, represents the "title" that Pilate ordered to be placed above the head of the Savior. The double-barred cross has several names. It is called the Lorraine, or Jerusalem, cross, because Godfrey, de Bouillon, duke of Lorraine, whom the crusaders chose as the first Christian ruler of Jerusalem, adopted it as his symbol. It is called also the archiepiscopal, or patriarchal, cross because in the Roman Catholic church it marked the rank of cardinals, archbishops and patriarchs. Cardinal Richelieu, as archbishop of Lucon, always wore it.

How did these four crosses of the double-barred crosses ever come into this country? Cardinal Richelieu's niece, the duchess d'Aiguillon, was much interested in the missions in New France. She made many gifts to the missionaries, among which were some crosses that were to be given to the Indian chiefs as rewards for good conduct and zeal for the faith and for other meritorious things. In honor of her uncle, the cardinal, the duchess had the crosses made with two bars.

There were several missionaries who received the crosses, but Father Marquette was the only one who traversed the region in which they were made their discovery. It is likely, therefore, that he himself lost them; since the four were together, it is not probable that Indians lost them.

First Message by Wireless.

Sending messages by telegraph and telephone without wires thousands of miles over the oceans is a far cry from sending a wireless impulse the length of a kitchen table. But before Marconi did that others had discovered certain principles which made it possible. Not, however, until Hertz discovered the progressive propagation of electromagnetic action through space was the period of speculation and experiment near its end.

Marconi, then a young man just out of his teens, read of the experiments of Hertz, and conceived the first apparatus for transmitting the idea. At the end of several months he had his idea of such an apparatus complete and a message in the Morse code was sent the length of an ordinary kitchen table on which the apparatus was set up. Out of this initial success the wonderful system of wireless telegraph and telephonic communication of today has developed, remarks the Detroit News.

"Resurrection Plant."

During the autumn and early winter several years ago men might have been seen in the streets selling an odd little plant which they called the "resurrection plant." Many and wonderful were the tales told of the plant by these itinerant salesmen to persuade their prospective customers to buy. Most of them either stated directly or else led their hearers to infer that the plants came only from the Holy land, where they were emblematical of the Resurrection. Most of them, however, were Polypodium incarium, the commonest of all the ferns of Florida.

During the dry season the plant curls up into a small ball and has the appearance of being dead. In this condition it will bear transportation well. When placed in a bowl containing a little water its leaves will unfold and assume a bright green color, making a pretty and ornamental plant.

A Priceless Possession.

Mr. Seton Thompson, the Canadian naturalist, once told of an old Indian whom he had brought down from one of the reservations to show him New York.

He took the old man along Broadway at night, over Brooklyn Bridge, on the overhead and underground railways, and so on.

At last he asked the old man what he thought of New York, and this was the reply:—

"Mr. Seton Thompson, in the land from which I came we have no bridges to span our great rivers, no great white ways to spoil the darkness of the night sky, no trains under the land and over the land; but we have peace of mind!"

Heart of Famous Man.

Embalmed in a casket, the heart of the late Sir William Osler, famous physician, will be placed in the Osler library at McGill University on its arrival from England. The heart, as well as a medical library of several thousand volumes, were bequeathed to the university by the physician. Special quarters in the medical building have been set aside for the bequest.

Nurse Give Opinion.

Probably no one will dispute the estimate of Mrs. Margaret Wood, the British Prime Minister's nurse on two occasions in his childhood, that Mr. Bonar Law is one of the greatest statesmen whom Canada has produced. "No man is a hero to his valet," it has been said. Mr. Law has the satisfaction, at least, of being a hero to his nurse.

British Are Constructing Huge New Plane Carrier

Big Strides in Aviation

The strides Great Britain is taking in aviation are evidenced by the construction now under way of a giant engine said to be twice as powerful as any in existence, and the development of a naval airplane carrier of a revolutionary character.

The airplane engine, which will develope 200 horse power a cylinder, is being built secretly on the outskirts of London, England. Air Ministry officials are reported to be confident that the new engine will make a transatlantic trip in less than twenty-four hours a possibility.

The principle of the new engine was originated in Italy, but the British engineers have made improvements on it. It has a 24-cylinder machine of ordinary type the plane would have an effective radius of 3,000 miles. Yet it is asserted that this powerful engine is much smaller than the average airplane engine.

The decks of the new airplane carriers are free of obstructions. The funnels are set back and a number of the vessels, makins it appear as if an addition had been added to the vessels. The two upper decks are connected by two runways, the upper one drome deck, while the lower ones are equipped as workshops for making repairs. The flying deck also is fitted with a section of rail at the bow, so that the planes can alight at night.

The carrier is equipped with an ingenious rotating endless platform for the planes to land and get off. The machine hops off in the opposite direction to that in which the platform rotatates so that the correct speed is attained. By the use of this platform the fastest plane can alight on the deck of the airplane carrier, for a machine which is going three miles a minute can be brought to a stop in a space of not more than forty feet.

The fact is that though the British are far behind France in the number of planes they have, they are devoting great attention to designing and constructing giant aircraft and fighting craft. Among the "hush-hush" planes being constructed by the Air Ministry is a machine capable of carrying fifty soldiers through the air at a speed of 130 miles an hour.

A Gigantic Crater.

Many readers remember the photographs taken by the eminent explorer, Mr. Thomas Alexander Barnes of the wonderful "Land of the Great Craters" in Tanganyika. The crater of Ngoro Ngoro is that of the largest volcano that ever existed upon this planet. It is ten miles from rim to rim, and about the great crater are grouped other volcanoes, playing upon the mighty rim, that are nevertheless several of them larger than Mount Etna. Moreover, the vast principal crater, covered with white clover knee-high, is the feeding-ground of herds of game in countless profusion. Sir Charles Ross of Balnagowan was one of the first non-German white men to visit this region. The Germans kept the discovery to themselves that their own scientists might enjoy a monopoly. Sir Charles has just purchased the entire crater of Ngoro Ngoro. Asked what he intended to do with it, he threw up his hands in humorous despair, "I am sure I don't know"; but he added, "I saw the spot unspoiled and untouched, and I made up my mind that I wanted it to remain that way. Some day it may make a health resort, a British Yellowstone Park. I don't intend to have this paradise of wild things ruined, as it might be. In looking over the crater when he was there, Sir Charles estimated that there were at least 75,000 wild cattle pasturing on the clover. The crater has been the home of all kinds of wild things from the earliest ages, and contains, it is believed, prehistoric remains of many unknown species. Dangerous animals abound with the others." Sir Charles says he was "walked up" by five lions in the crater, but the hunting for them is so good that there is not much danger."

Toys From Rubbish.

One of the most remarkable boys in British lives at Teddington, near London.

He is David Walton, aged thirteen, and he is described as a mechanical genius of great promise. He has never played with bought toys, but has made his own ever since he was able to hold a penknife. One of his recent feats was to construct a working model steam-engine at a total cost of sixpence. He used a cocoa tin as a boiler.

But his most wonderful achievement was a full-sized gramophone, which he made out of odds and ends of rubbish in a single evening. He used an empty margarine box as a cabinet. The only thing that gave him any trouble was the sound-box, for which he used a tooth-paste tin!

He engraves blocks and prints his school magazine, while he is the recognized expert in his neighborhood for the repair of engines and so on. He has never been given any toys, and his Christmas and birthday presents always take the form of tools, which he puts to very good use.

Fur From Wool.

A newly invented process, whereby certain kinds of deeces not well adapted to spinning can be manufactured into a fur-like fabric, which is supposed to present valuable hygenic advantage over skin furs for clothing because the material is mounted on a cloth foundation, is reported by Consul General T. W. Sammons, from Australia. The inventor claims that this material has an excellent appearance, that it is serviceable for all purposes for which fur is utilized, and for clothing where the utmost warmth, the least weight and the maximum of protection are demanded.

Early Britons Used Coal.

Tools and cinders found near the ancient Roman wall in England indicate that the Britons used coal prior to the Roman invasion in 54 B.C. By the English people it was first used as a fuel in 852, and, in the blast furnace for the production of iron, in 1612. In America those intrepid Jesuit missionaries, Joliet and Marquette, discovered coal near the present site of Utica, Ill., in 1673 That the Indians were acquainted with numerous coal beds and actually burned these black "stones" instead of firewood, there can be no doubt.

TELL OF PREHISTORIC TIMES

University of Chicago Professor Reads History in Specimens Thousands of Centuries Old.

Enormous ferns, gigantic rushes and club mosses and strange-looking trees, many of them more than 100 feet in height and with needles of two or three yards length, and a host of insects, among which huge dragon flies and cockroaches appeared predominated, once inhabited a swamp at Braidwood, Ill., according to Adolf C. Noe, professor of paleobotany at the University of Chicago.

Professor Noe reconstructed this picture of the vegetation and animal life of prehistoric times from fossilized remains found in Skinner mine No. 2, in the Braidwood district, fifty-seven miles southeast of Chicago.

"In the Braidwood mine," Professor Noe stated, "is now the best place to find fossils in northern Illinois and has somewhat replaced the famous Mazon creek deposits in popularity with collectors.

"The coal is found at a depth of forty-nine feet and directly above it is a grayish shale which the miners call soapstone, and which contains round calcareous stones. If you crack these stones with a hammer they split into half like a sandwich, and on the inside of each half you see the impression of fern leaves and other plants of the coal era. Also insects, fishes, crawfish and other small inhabitants of land, water and air are found, but the plants are most predominant.

"A considerable number of plant species can be listed from Braidwood and we are able to reconstruct in our imaginations a lively picture of the vegetation of these long, bygone days.

"There was once in Braidwood a swamp which stretched far east, west and south, and which was inhabited by enormous ferns, gigantic rushes and club mosses, and strange-looking trees which had needles of two or three yards length. Many of the trees of that time must have been more than 100 feet in height, as we can judge from the size of the trunk and leaves.

"The animal population of these swamps consisted small reptiles, amphibia, fishes and a host of insects, among which enormous dragon-flies and gigantic cockroaches seem to have been predominant. There were no birds, no warm-blooded animals, no birdlike reptiles, no flowers. Probably the only colors which living nature provided were green, brown, yellow and black. The sounds were the croaking of frog-like amphibia, the noise produced by cockroaches and dragon-flies; no singing of birds, no chirping of crickets.

"A strange world! Of the enormous vegetable masses which fell into those swamps entombed small beds were formed, and 100,000,000 years passed away before man came and ultimately utilized again the sunlight and heat which had been stored up in these millions of tons of coal."

"Ads" on Postage Stamps.

Advertisements, reports the Westminster Gazette, are to appear on the back of British postage stamps. The walls of the post office, according to a statement by Mr. Kellaway, the postmaster general, at the 1920 club. Mr. Kellaway hopes to derive a substantial revenue from the innovation, stating that he was also looking to plaster the post office with advertisements, or have advertisements on the back of stamps, unless there was a decent return to be got out of it."

He stated that the post office had invited tenders from contractors for these advertisements. The Westminster Gazette understands that the advertisements will be affixed to the stamps before the gum is applied.

Although the work of obtaining advertisements and fixing the terms is to be delegated to contractors; the notices will have to be approved by the postmaster general. It is understood that all classes of advertisements except those dealing with alcoholic liquors will be accepted for approval.

Whisky Not Necessity of Life.

Whisky is not a necessity of life, even for a Scotchman in the tropics, according to a decision reached in the courts of Nairobi, Kanya Colony, East Africa, after lengthy legal arguments, reports the London Express correspondent.

The question arose over a case in which a grocery store sued a minor for goods supplied. The law says that the only debts which can be recovered from minors are those incurred in supplying the necessities of life. The debt in question included an item of three bottles of whisky. It was argued for the prosecution that as the minor was a Scotchman living in the tropics whisky was a necessity, but his arguments were overridden, and an order made for the debt, minus the value of the three bottles.

Shyness of Sandy.

In a rural district of Forfarshire a young plowman went courting one evening. In vain he racked his brain for some interesting topic; he could think up no subject at all suitable for the occasion; not one sentence could he utter, and for two long hours he sat on in silent despair.

The girl meanwhile was silent; she no doubt remembered the teaching of the old Scotch song: "Men maun be the first to speak," and she sat patiently regarding him with demure surprise.

At last he exclaimed suddenly: "Penny, there's a feather on your apron!"

"I widna ha'e wondered if there had been two," said Jenny, "for I've been sitting aside a goose a' nicht."—The Scotsman.

Viscount Grey Lover of Birds

Many interesting tales of bird life are told by Viscount Grey, all the result of personal experience, of care ful, quiet watching in the few hours of leisure which he has been able to steal from public life.

If there were a prize for the best nest-building, Lord Grey says he would award it to the long-tailed tit. During every week-end in a period of two and a half months which he spent in his country cottage he watched a pair of long-tailed tits building their nest in a sweetbriar hedge. These birds are such careful and conscientious nest builders that they never hurry, and perhaps nothing made Lord Grey so happy as to see the little family born into the world on a Sunday in May after his many week-ends of watching.

Lord Grey's most faithful friends were two widgeons, which settled with him for some time, leading a tame and happy life. Then they decided to take a long tour, joining a flock of wild birds. After an absence of six or seven months the female widgeon returned to Lord Grey's garden, and a month later the male widgeon returned. Both had probably travelled thousands of miles, but both returned to the sanctuary they remembered in England.

In Lord Grey's opinion partridges provide the highest standard of family life and robins the lowest. Mr. and Mrs. Robin are glad to get rid of their families as soon as possible, and themselves always separate for the autumn and winter.

"I like the cuckoo," says Lord Grey, "but I am inclined to apply the remark to him that you often hear applied to a discreditable friend: 'I can't help liking him, I know him so well.'" He tells how an apparently innocent young cuckoo became fierce and revengeful when a baby whitethroat was placed in the nest legitimately his, but which the cuckoo had stolen.

Those who are interested in the supposed "mystery" of how the cuckoo gets its egg into a nest which it cannot get at properly would, perhaps, like to be informed of a physiological fact already well known to most naturalists. The hen cuckoo is so equipped by nature that it is able to grip, pass along, and release at will the newly but completely formed egg about to be laid."

The bird is thus enabled to place its egg carefully and gently at the bottom of even a deep nest with only a small opening at top. If the egg were carried and placed into such a nest by the beak, this feat could only be accompanied by dropping it at random on to another egg or eggs, with risk of cracking and perhaps general mess.

There is a species of crow in India which assembles in flocks of about twenty or thirty in the recesses of forests, and whose note so exactly resembles the human voice in loud laughing that a person ignorant of the real cause would fancy that a very merry party was close at hand.

The laughing jackass, when warning his feathered mates that day break is at hand, utters a cry resembling a troop of boys shouting, whooping, and laughing in wild chorus. The innocent nightjar, which has been slandered under the name of goatsucker, has a cry as of one lamenting in distress, which once heard is never forgotten.

Among birds that have the power of imitation the parrot is supposed to talk the best; but as a matter of fact, is voice is decidedly inferior to that of the mynah, a species of starling, of which there are examples at the Zoological Gardens. Curiously enough, the cock bird speaks in a high, clear tone like that of a child, while the hen has a gruff voice.

Another bird, the "mopreork," of Australia, is frequently heard vehemently demanding more pork in a clear, almost human voice. The poor-will of America also demands his punishment in a distinct imitation of the human voice, and the command of the stinet-bird to come back could easily be mistaken for a human voice.

In "Marvels of Instinct," Mr. G. Garrett recalls the story of a sparrow which, finding a newly built martin's nest, took "possession" in the absence of the owner. The martin, seeing the usurper, called for help, and soon a thousand martins came, at "full speed," to attack the sparrow; but the latter, being reserved in on every side, and presenting only his large beak at the entrance of the nest, was invulnerable, and made the boldest of them that durst approach him repent of their temerity.

After a quarter of an hour's conflict all the martins disappeared. The sparrow thought he had got the better, and the spectators judged that the martins had abandoned their undertaking.

Not in the least! They immediately returned to the charge, and, each of them having procured a little of the tempered earth with which they make their nests, they all at once fell upon the sparrow and enclosed him in the nest to perish there, although they could not drive him out.

MRS. ANDERSON TELLS WOMEN

How Backache and Periodic Pains Yield to Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Leslie, Sask.—"For about a year I was troubled with a distressing downbearing pain before and during the period, and from terrible headaches and backache. I hated to go to a doctor, and as I knew several women who had taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound with good results, I finally bought some and took four bottles of it. I certainly do recommend it to every woman with troubles like mine, for I feel fine now and hope to be able to keep your medicine on hand at all times, as no woman ought to be without it in the house."—Mrs. OSCAR A. ANDERSON, Box 15, Leslie, Sask.

Mrs. Kelsey Adds Her Testimony

Copenhagen, N. Y.—"I read your advertisement in the papers and my husband induced me to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to get relief from pains and weakness. I was so weak that I could not walk at times. Now I can do my housework and help my husband out doors, too. I am willing for you to publish this letter if you think it will help others."—Mrs. HERBERT KELSEY, R.F.D., Copenhagen, N. Y.

Sick and ailing women everywhere in the Dominion should try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound before they give up hope of recovery. C

Berlin Woman Jurors Hard.

German women, recently accorded the right to sit on juries in criminal cases, have shown an inclination to convict even more severe punishment than men, particularly in cases in which the defendants themselves have been women.

"I always feel sorry for a woman defendant," said a Berlin judge commenting on woman's entry into the jury box, "when a majority of the jury is composed of the fairer sex. My experience so far has been that the women have less mercy than men to hold out for verdicts accordingly."

Ever since Germany became a republic and women gained the right to the ballot, the question of permitting them to sit on juries has been brought up for discussion from time to time, as there are many opponents to the advancement of women's right among the public generally and especially in the legal profession. It was long contended that women were too tender hearted to listen to sordid details of criminal cases. But the women demurred to these contentions, kept up the struggle for admission as jurors and, after nearly four years, have finally won their point.

UNVEILING MARTIN MEMORIAL

WHO was Abraham Martin? Had that question been asked one year ago probably not one Canadian in a hundred thousand would have been able to answer it. Today it is different. Most Canadians now know he was first King's pilot on the St. Lawrence river, and the first known Canadian of Scottish extraction—two claims to distinction either one of which might have made him famous. Latterly other things to his credit have come to be known, and they will be recorded in their due place.

In the meantime is it not remarkable how little Canadians know of Canada's history—as rich a bit of nation history as ever was crowded into a space of three hundred odd years. The high points of the splendid story some of us know fairly well, but the little byways and side-lights, so full of human interest, they lie in a deep obscurity from which they are being rescued only by the patient digging of this or that person or institution actuated by a love of the heroic past and a realization of its value in building the national life of the future.

Abraham Martin was some figure of a man in his day although most of his just claims to fame seem to have been thrust upon him. It was hardly more than a matter of accident that the "Plains of Abraham" should come to be named after him, and yet was plenty to set all good Canadians wondering who he was and what manner of life he led. Much digging in the archives of Quebec, and there are many interesting or more faithfully kept, has brought out much information about the man and his times. He was born in France, his father being a Scot, which is probably why Jesuit writings of the times refer to him as "Abraham Martin, called the Scot." His father probably came from Perthshire and was one of the Scottish Guards of Louis XI. In 1614 Abraham brought his French wife to Canada and thus he saw the actual founding of New France may be gathered from the fact that his name was on the list of the 31 white persons who lived in Canada from 1629 to 1632, and he was then known as a pilot. He later had seven children from whom have come a vast number of descendants among whom are numbered some of Quebec's best families and leading citizens. Bishop Tache of St Boniface is one of his descendants in direct line. Champlain made Martin a deed to the farm land on the Plains of Abraham, and documents telling of his living there still exist. He apparently travelled greatly up and down the river for Cape Martin in the Gulf of St. Lawrence is also named after him.

All this was distinctive enough to justify the memorial which has been raised to Martin in the Harbor Square at Quebec. The handsome shaft of granite, designed by Henri Prince, of Quebec, and built by Smith, was unveiled early in May by Hon. Athanase David, Quebec's Provincial Treasurer and the event was marked by a gathering of notables including the Governor of Quebec, Sir Charles Fitzpatrick. Among those who spoke were F. L. Wanklyn, representing the Canadian Pacific Railway Company by whom the memorial was erected, Lieut.-Col. Alex. Fraser, A.D.C. to the Lieutenant Governor of Ontario, Lawrence Burpee, President of the Canadian Historical Society and Monseigneur Laflamme, Curé of the Champlain market. The latter spoke as the successor of the first Curé of Quebec who was Martin's parish priest and who was afterwards martyred by the Iroquois. He read the baptismal certificate of Abraham Martin's first child who was also the first white child born in Canada. He also read the baptismal certificate of Martin's third child upon which appeared the name of Samuel de Champlain as godfather. The memorial has been set on the Pacific Avenue frontage, not only of Abraham Martin but of the stout-hearted pilots who for over three hundred years have done so much to make the St. Lawrence River a safe and speedy route to and from Europe. That connection uses the route more than any other, and the arrival at Quebec of the great liner "Empress of Scotland" on her first trip of the season with 731 passengers from Europe later in the day of the unveiling emphasizes what has been accomplished in the making of the St. Lawrence route a great highway for ocean borne commerce.

THAT WOOD PILE

There ain't no poor in Napanee
Hard times have changed to good,
The ones that lacked a little
Wealth
Have died for want of wood.

Let's sell them wood, and "do" them good,
Said a few men of renown;
For we can palm off anything
To the simple folks round town.

We find it cheaper yet to burn
Our carpets and our chairs
It finds a job for some poor soul,
And our fuel is less than their's.

So Councilmen of Napanee,
If your reasonings none too good,
Just get your heads together
Then we'll have lots of "wood."

DEAR PEOPLE:—

How's your winter's coal hanging out? Ours is out altogether, but we are not buying much of this charity wood. Oh, no, we have faith, and hope yet to be spared enough sense to know a good thing when we see it. We try to buy economically, and at the same time do the fair thing.

Our Saviour said, "Go Feed the Flocks," so you'll pardon us for referring to the word (feed); feed it means (not fleece). Now people don't be offended at our little chat; we want to keep you from getting the (blues), and remember one thing, "don't get your feet wet." We are still here and doing fine. If we can't keep your house warm we can at least make your feet feel happy. So when you're down town drop in and get warm by our (Hot Air System).

The death of Henry Allen, Newburgh, in the Kingston General Hospital, came as a shock to the village. He suffered from cancer of the lungs. Deceased was a fine citizen and good neighbor. He is survived by his widow and one son, who was recently married to Miss Weese, of Selby, at home; two sisters, Mrs. Huffman, Colebrook, and Mrs. Galbraith, Lindsay, and one brother, William, Moscow.

On Sunday afternoon, a Ford car driven by Mr. Byron Pennell, South Napanee, came to grief on the top of Roblin hill. Mr. Pennell, with his wife and family and Miss Irene Garrison were just at the top of the hill, when Mr. Pennell lost control of the car it turned completely over. Mr. and Mrs. Pennell and two daughters were badly bruised and shaken up and Miss Garrison received a bad shaking up and a broken collar bone. The top of the car was demolished.

The ceremony of ordination was held on Sunday morning last in St. George's Cathedral, Kingston, at eleven o'clock. His Lordship Bishop Bidwell officiating, assisted by Very Rev. Dean Starr and Rev. W. E. Kidd. The candidate was Rev. Harry Kerr Coleman, of Parham, and a singular feature of the service was the fact that his father and grandfather, both ministers, were present at the ceremony. Rev. Coleman, who was ordained, is a son of Rev. J. H. H. Coleman, Napanee.

To return to the home of his birth after an absence of forty-two years is the unique and pleasing experience of Mr. John Finegan, of Gleichen, Alberta, a growing town just thirty miles east of Calgary. Mr. Finegan was born and raised on Amherst Island and when a young man in the year of 1881 left for Winipeg, where he received a job as carpenter for the C.P.R. He soon saw better opportunities on the land and went into ranching, which business he made a great success of and in 1914 he retired from active life, selling his ranch for a fine sum, and taking up residence in Gleichen.

"We love Him because He first loved us." John 4-19; "Whatsoever ye do, do it heartily as unto the Lord, and not unto men," Col. 3-23; "He that dwelleth in the secret places of the most High shall abide under the shadow of the Almighty." Ps. 91-1; "He giveth power to the faint, and to them that have no might, He increaseth strength," Is. 40-29; Blessed are they that have not seen, and yet have believed," John 20-29; "We have not an High Priest which cannot be touched with the feeling of our infirmities," Heb. 4-15.

O dearly, dearly has He loved,
And we must love Him too;
And trust in His redeeming blood,
And try His work to do.

Brides Measured After Wedding.

"Measuring of the bride" is a ceremony that follows every wedding in the town of Royden, England. About 300 years ago the lord of the manor bequeathed $25,000, the interest from which was to be given to four brides of the place. Under the terms of the bequest the youngest, eldest, tallest, and shortest brides are to divide the money. The records determine who is the youngest and who is the oldest, but to decide the tallest and shortest, each bride must remove her shoes and let down her hair and be measured.
